

Entry:

i enter based on boxes - if there's a 9ma/21ma/50ma box on the daily charts then I look at the candles inside the box, if price is breaking above the highest close of one of the candles, and if the dma's are below the price, then i can enter the trade either if the daily candle closes above the highest close of one of the daily candles, or if it didn't close yet but broke the latest highs of the box (not candle closes only, including wicks (that are probably a little bit outside the box)).

Exit:

if the price breaks below the last higher low, and below 9wma then i will exit.

of course it can change (example; a 9dma box is forming and breaking down) but the 9wma is the general thing I want to stay above.

if the trade goes my way - then if the current price is above all prices (no previous price at that level), then i exit at the time the price went up the difference of the box (from the bottom to the ceiling. ex; box is between 190 & 200 - entered around 200, exit at 210).

if there is a previous price, then draw the next daily zone and when hit, take partials and raise stops to BE, and in the next zone take the rest of the profits and exit the trade.

Risk:

I am in "high school" (not a regular one but that doesn't matter) so I have no financial responsibilities, i have enough money in my bank account to not cash out at all, but the money i use is technically my father's money (20k$ - he is pretty rich so it's fine) so i can't risk too much but i can definitely manage some risk.
