

Fourteen and a half questions with the Aernis¹

Added by Joseph DeVaughn on April 24, 2012.

I recently sat down with Stephanie Aerni and Matt Aerni, and asked seven point two-five questions each. these two are two of the best teachers in teaching history , both in whom are very comical but serious when it comes to academics. With highly superb teaching methods, students have a lot of fun learning. My experiences with the Aernis, both in class and in this interview, has always been a quality time.

Joseph DeVaughn: What do you think of Mr. Aerni's stash?

S. Ae: I do not like his mustache.

S. Aerni: Coshocton, Ohio.

Joseph DeVaughn: Are you sad that people won't be creatively exposing their inner writer in front of the class next year, since Creative Writing was cut?

M. Aerni: I am sad that there weren't enough kids to sign up, but if this year's Creative writing class had to be the last, it would be a great way to end.

S. Aerni: Always a teacher.

Joseph DeVaughn: If you could be anything other than a educator, what would you be?

M. Aerni: I would roast coffee, and own a coffee roasting business. I would also travel to countries that grow coffee beans and bring back beans to roast.

Joseph DeVaughn: How long have you taught?

S. Aerni: This is my seventh year.

Joseph DeVaughn: What do you do outside of school?

M. Aerni: I walk my dog, roast coffee, listen to records, eat ice cream and I sit on my back deck and pet my dog.

Joseph DeVaughn: Do you highly value music?

S. Aerni: I think so, but in a way I'd value art, but not as much as Mr. Aerni values music.
