Dallas to win

Analysis:

The Dallas Stars are poised to extend the series in Game 5, leveraging their home-ice advantage and depth to counter the Edmonton Oilers' momentum. Despite trailing 3-1, Dallas returns to the American Airlines Center, where strategic line matchups can be optimized by coach Pete DeBoer. Goaltender Jake Oettinger, known for his resilience, is expected to rebound from recent performances. The Stars' balanced scoring, with contributions from veterans like Jamie Benn and emerging talents such as Wyatt Johnston, provides a diversified offensive threat. Maintaining discipline has been a hallmark of Dallas's play, limiting Edmonton's power-play opportunities. While the potential absence of defenseman Chris Tanev poses a challenge, the team's depth on the blue line can compensate. Given these factors, Dallas has a solid foundation to secure a win and keep their playoff hopes alive. The Public and Money are both heavy on the Oilers to win and close out the series.

Indiana +4

Analysis:

Quick note- Knicks Center Karl Anthony Towns is listed as questionable to play in this game- if he is ruled out this line will change rapidly. Get in early if you like the Pacers to get better odds. The Indiana Pacers are well-positioned to cover the +4 point spread against the New York Knicks in Game 5 of the Eastern Conference Finals. Despite being underdogs, the Pacers have demonstrated resilience and adaptability throughout the series. Their fast-paced, high-scoring offense has consistently challenged the Knicks' slower, defensive style. Tyrese Haliburton's leadership and the team's depth have been pivotal, especially in clutch moments. Moreover, Indiana's impressive 6-1 road record this postseason indicates their capability to perform under pressure in hostile environments. Given these factors, the Pacers have a strong chance to not only cover the spread but potentially secure a victory at Madison Square Garden. The Public and Money are both heavily leaning on the Pacers to win and close out the series.
