

Ethical Dilemma Research

There are a number of research tools available to you when researching an ethical dilemma. You will find the links for most of these resources and more on the library's website.

Remember to ask Ms Marsh if you need any help using the databases or finding other sources!

Browse for Library Books

Library books are an excellent source of information. Start by searching our library's catalogue for your topic. Type your topic in as a keyword search and see what books you will find! You may also browse the following book series: At Issue, Current Controversies, Opposing Viewpoints, Compact

Research, and Contemporary Issues for topic ideas. Type the name of the book series in the search box and click "series" from the drop down menu to see a full list of titles. You may also click here to see a list of these books.

Gale Library Databases

Online library databases offer a vast collection of current information covering many topics. Here you will find academic journals, newspaper and magazine articles, videos and audiofiles. To access the databases, click here, or follow the links on the library website. Use the password rainbow when searching at home. View the how-to guide here.

The following databases are a good place to start.

Academic Onefile is a one stop database covering a broad range of topics.

Canada in Context provides a list of current social issues with a Canadian focus – click the "view all" button next to "social issues" or browse topics from the top menu

Environmental Studies provides a list of current topics and issues with an environmental focus. Search by topic, or click "browse issues" to see the entire list of topics.

Religion and Philosophy supports a broad range of topics from theological approaches to social issues.

Open sources on the Internet TO FIND A TOPIC

Browse one of these sites if you need background information on your topic, or if you are searching for a topic and need ideas.
