This story is described in the third person and this story is mainly about a man named Butch who is stronger than others. He charges people to enter the playground because he is stronger than others. Soon, a little boy named Adam is transferred to this school, Adam was skinny and didn't like to eat, but he didn't give in to Butch, he didn't pay the fee and didn't go to the playground, but he wanted Butch to stop his behavior, he was thinner than Butch, so he didn't know what to do it.

Then he went to ask his uncle who used to be a wrestler, his uncle was also short, but he beat a lot of people, so Adam was curious about how to do it, his uncle taught him four points: 1. Relax, 2. Keep distance, 3. Have a secret weapon, 4. Show compassion, so he went to school again, Butch wanted to ask him for money as soon as he saw him, he still insisted not to give him money, Butch put he caught him and chased him. At this time, he remembered the four skills that his uncle taught him. After implementing them one by one, it really succeeded. Adam managed to escape, and because he used his uncle's method to resolve the fight, everyone has since then with free access to the playground, Adam and Butch became good friends.

In this story, my favorite sentence is "Stop it!" Adam shouted. "Stop making fun of my friend Butch." (on page 13, The Bully and the Shrimp)

I like this sentence because it seems to be a sentence to protect a friend, but it is not entirely true. The two of them were still fighting before, but Adam finally resolved the crisis by using the method taught by his uncle. Although Adam used a method to resolve the crisis, I think the more valuable thing is that Adam and Butch really became good friends. It is a very wonderful fate, just as the Chinese saying goes, from an exchange of blows friendship grows, Adam's cleverness not only allows everyone to freely enter the playground again, but also gain a new friend.
I think this sentence is not only a sentence that makes them truly turn enemies into friends, but also means that Butch is not that bad. Adam not only doesn't care how Butch treats him, but he is willing to be friends with him in the end. This friendship really touched me.

This story describes the spirit of never giving up for justice. Although it is not a very long novel, it still has a lot of meaning in it. I admire Adam's spirit very much, he did not flinch because he was shorter and smaller than Butch, but bravely stood up to confront him, this spirit is really worth learning.

After reading this story, I think on the other hand, it can also let everyone know and pay attention to the seriousness of bullying again, although this is just a story, bullying still exists in our lives. When we encounter bullying or see it, we should stand up, not be afraid, and try to make the world free from bullying.

What fascinated me at the end of the whole story is that Adam and Butch ended up being good friends, maybe Butch was bad, maybe we all did little bad things, but as long as we don't commit crimes again, the friends around us will gradually increase. This friendship from enemies to friends is good. This is really a great story.
