

Ⓞ options	Ⓞ encourage	Ⓞ new
Ⓞ home	Ⓞ laugh	Ⓞ curious
Ⓞ pesto	Ⓞ exercise	Ⓞ savory
Ⓞ unicycle	Ⓞ explore	Ⓞ bold
Ⓞ conversation	Ⓞ learn	Ⓞ diverse

Diverse: I want to live a life full of diverse foods, people, and experiences. Actually, I'm not bothered by eating the same foods again and again, but I get easily bored by meeting the same kinds of people and have the same kinds of conversations repeatedly. I only have one life to live and want to go to as many places as possible and try to understand life from various perspectives.

Home: To me, home is a feeling not a place. I have lived in more than 20 different places. I have no real hometown, although I've lived in Busan longer than I've lived anywhere. Still, I love the feeling of going home after a long day, closing the door, and enjoying the comforts of home. Perhaps the place I feel most at home is in the comfy chair on the verandah where my wife and I enjoy a drink and conversation at the end of each day.

Unicycle: My father developed a passion for riding unicycles in his late fifties. He would ride around the neighborhood almost everyday. He once wrote a poem about riding the unicycle. Shortly before my wedding, he fell off the unicycle on a rainy day and broke his leg. He still made it to Korea for the wedding, but had to hobble around on crutches. He started riding again as soon as he healed and actually died while unloading unicycles for the riding club he had organized at an elementary school. Because of his unicycle passion, we put one on his tombstone. I think he'd like that.

Savory: I like this word because I like the flavor it describes and the meaning of its other word forms. Savory foods have a deep taste like pesto or chestnuts. To savor something means to deeply enjoy or value it. I hope to savor experiences and meals of life.

