Q&A Below

Q&A	Q: 30 Days after attending a workshop, If there were 50 people, how many have changed the way they handle polarization and use the taught skills? Q: What about allowing people to remain polarized, but not handle differences with violence? Q: To clarify, was that on a 100 point or 25 point scale? Q: If I read the report correctly, it looks like Reds were more likely to depolarize with only Reds in attendance rather than a variety of views? Q: In the report, there's a comment that things don't fall neatly into leaning/party. To examine it further, issues would be more illuminating. Q: Could you clarify the control group definition? C: When I'm doing events for a local alliance that aren't workshops, the survey doesn't answer the questions I have about the events we've held. We have an in house survey and have those results. Q: How does the survey information feed back to improve the workshops and events? C: Was it worth your while to come here? This was very helpful for me to learn the information here. Q: Thank you for the report and sharing it warts and all. 	appreciate the thoroughness. Is it possible to get the raw data to see the data spread? Is this a few people that really got depolarized or more evenly spread amongst all participants? Q: How much would it cost to have a larger, long term study? C: On page 5 of the Report, “not all Braver Angels programs are equally effective; some workshops show mixed results, especially when they do not involve direct interaction or emotional vulnerability.” This shows we’re dealing more with emotion and not always with facts. Q: I wanted to ask Melinda to share her survey. Q: Is there any kind of follow up for the data? As we bring it in, are we re-evaluating every 6 months to see what changes should be made? Q: Has there been an evaluation of the surveys given over time?	Asked Back to Back 1:04:09 1:04:56 1:05:25 1:10:10
