

Someone who cares about helping other people and the welfare about other people. Also people who care more about helping the environment and protecting people from gun violence.

A Democrat is somebody who believes in a strong government, many laws and regulations, and believes in fairness and equality for all.

Someone who believes the government should help people more economically and provide assistance

Someone who favors emphasizes issues like climate change, social justice issues, right to choose, and more federal regulations

A democrat is someone who believes the government should be very involved in the citizens lives. Democrats try to help those who aren't helping themselves. They believe in funding lots of free programs for those less fortunate. They believe that a woman should get to choose what happens to her body and not the government.

a person has a Liberal point of view and wants everyone to be equal.

A democrat is a person who believes there should be more societal programs such as food banks and more funding that goes to the greater good. They also believe in no tax cuts and health care for all. If one is a Democrat One would call themselves the left a liberal

Someone who favors emphasizes issues like climate change, social justice issues, right to choose, and more federal regulations

A whiner

Democrats are more concerned about social issues

A democrat is traditionally someone who believes in movement toward social and political equality. This typically means more social programs and higher taxes which leads to bigger government. The democratic party tends toward more liberal and open social views supporting marriage equality, prochoice and health care for all.

someone who thinks the government should be more involved in the lives of the people in America

A Democrat is someone who believes in universal healthcare, more equal income distribution, abortion rights, racial equality, and climate change.

A Democrat believes the government has a responsibility to work towards equality for all -- that regardless of where or to whom someone is born, they have a right to the same opportunities that Ivanka or Eric Trump has. From an economic perspective this means Democrats want the government to ensure some basic access to healthcare and education and minimum income, and that it's ok to tax the most wealthy people and big businesses in order to pay for all this.

A member of the democratic party is more liberal, believes in social equality, and other things like protecting the environment and a woman's right to choose what to do with her body.

Someone who is more focused about their own individual success. Also they are more interested in loosening regulations so big businesses can succeed because they believe that will be better for the economy.

The republican party has changed under president trump but traditionally speaking republicans stand for less government and more personal responsibility.

A republican is one who believes that you should help yourself. "Pull Your Self Up By The Boot Straps" They also like tax cuts and more boarder control (At least in this situation) Also, The right is known for less government involvement. If one is Republican They consider themselves the right or conservatives.

A Republican is somebody who believes in less government involvement, big business, and is more focused on capitalism.

People who feel that the governments role in individuals lives should be smaller, want to build a stronger infrastructure generally more socially conservative, and use government spending on things like military

A conservative, pro life, not as supportive of those who need help.

A person who is pro life, wants less taxes, and less government

Republican - someone who believes in the values of the republic someone who prefers less government involvement and supports lower taxes for companies and people.

Republicans believe that government should be smaller and rich people should be able to keep their $ instead of sharing it with those who have less. They believe that citizens have the right to have guns in order to protect themselves. They believe that immigrants should only be able to come to the USA legally.

A winner

Someone who stands for less federal government involvement, anti abortion, gun rights, and less taxes.

Republicans are more conservative, tend to be against things like abortion and gay marriage

"Someone who conforms to the beliefs of the Republican Party, which are generally to limit the involvement of government in the everyday lives of citizens. Republicans often believe the government should be minimized except in issues regarding advocating for the defense of the country, such as military." -Parents

"Republicans mainly support a small government in theory with less involvement in almost everything especially business regulation. They often believe businesses regulating themselves will do the better thing for businesses and for themselves." -Uncle (history teacher's perspective)

A Republican is someone whose politics lean more right. They believe more in the responsibility of the individual and tend to be more fiscally conservative. They also believe in limited government intervention.

Someone who believes in trickle down economics

In 2020, Republicans tend to view issues through a lens of how policies will impact him/herself, and their family personally. This is why they tend to focus their support for lower taxes, pro-business policies and want fewer government regulations managing everyday life. They also typically support a strong military.