

Test a Text Field, Test a Button

In job interviews, I have assessed a good number of testers on a question "how would you test a text field?". More recently, I have been playing with a similar idea on "how would you test a button?". In this session, we look at an application with a text field and a button, and figure out how we would test them. Is it really true that our approaches to simple things like this show our ability to explore as testers? Let's try it and talk about it.