

Martin Luther King Jr. Essay

Believing, peaceful, optimistic. A protester who fought for equality, bringing peace between the different races around the USA. When times got hard he stepped up, finding love in every situation. He went to jail more than thirty times, but guess what? That didn't stop him one bit. This peace-maker formed boycotts, sit-ins, protests, marches, and demonstrations to earn a promising future for the adults and little kids, . therefore, they wouldn't have to experience what he went through. This historical hero was knowledgeable enough to use words, not fists when fighting for equal rights. This persistent person is Martin Luther King Jr.

August 28th, 1963, Martin Luther King had a dream. On the footsteps of the Lincoln Memorial, Martin gave a speech, a heartfelt speech. Martin Luther King Jr. believed that colored civilians around the USA should, "Not be judged by the color of their skin but by the content of their character." Dr. King wanted equality and peace between different races, he wanted to be able to be hand in hand with everyone. This speech changed America's mindset and allowed black people to live free of discrimination. Dr. King's goal was to have equal peace and end racism, he achieved his goal, he changed the status quo, and it worked! Dr. King had done it! The March on Washington, the event that was happening during the "I Had A Dream" speech was a push for justice and peace. Dr. King had portrayed a role for his race, to earn freedom, to earn fairness. That is what he got. July 2nd, 1964 was the day black folk had won their freedom. President Johnson signed a document stating that discrimination and segregation was banned based on the basis of race and sex. This act was called the Civil Rights Act.

Alas, the world has yet to follow the dream of Martin Luther King Jr. We live in a place where discrimination of different races still exists. Even though segregation is illegal, people have the audacity to judge people of different races. Some even laugh about it. What would it feel like if we all lived in a world with no wars, no arguments, gender equality, and no racism? It might sound like this, with no wars countries would have peace; thus, no more individuals would be harmed by different nations' sake. Gender equality states that there would be no denied support and opportunities turned down just because of their gender. Racism, one of the most secretive problems that still lives in the world. Humanity needs to respect the discrimination laws like the US Constitution. I want to spread the golden rule around the world. You want to know what it is? Treat others the way you want to be treated. Martin Luther King once said, "We can say that our feet are tired, but our souls are rested." This quote expresses a sense of determination on the front of exhaustion. That's all you need to know, along with respect when it comes to racism. I believe that with enough love and peace, we can change the world forever without any problems. As civilians, we can rise up and follow what Dr. King's dream was to have peace.

My inspiration? My inspiration is my dad. My dad, Patrie, inspires me to support Dr. King's dream. My father reminds me of him sometimes. My father is in the military and travels a lot. Most places he travels to are throughout states and other countries who need some support with disaster relief of all kinds. My dad has run marathons for special causes, fundraised, and donated to charity just like Martin Luther King volunteered at boycotts, sit-ins, protests, and marches. They both like to help out their fellow men, which encourages me to follow in his footsteps and benefit from different events about our own community and school. I believe that judging people by the color of their skin is childish. While I'm growing up, I started realizing that when it comes to civil rights around the world, we should be seeing friendship and unity, not racism and discrimination. I want to see kindness all around the world, but that's up to us humans. Let's join hands for once, and make this world a better place!

In the end, our planet has developed many problems, but at the same time; solutions too. Martin Luthr King's dream was to gain equality and civil rights for African-Americans. Our world has built a bond with different races and has mostly followed the footsteps of Dr. King. Nevertheless, a little over 50% (#) of our globe is still racist. The planet would be better off without segregation and discrimination, and more fortunate with equality and peace all around. It is foolish of us humans to judge people by the color of their skin. Black people are no less of white folk. Dr. King reminds me of my father. My dad, Patrie, likes to help out the community and environment just like Martin Luther King, and I look forward to following their footsteps. Dr. King took protests to gain harmony in the world, it wasn't permanent but we can always finish what he started. Let's work together and make a better place for everyone to live in. We can do this!
