Reagan Semien is a high-efficiency point guard with the capability to seamlessly play off the ball. Reagan excels in systems that value ball pressure on the defensive end and fast-break transition into secondary flow on the offensive side.

Ms. Semien shows extremely quick acceleration in the open court either with the ball or when filling the lane. With full burst on the dribble, Reagan can push ahead and find teammates streaking in transition or she can initiate change of pace/direction moves with either hand. She rarely turns the ball over, makes good decisions with the basketball and operates with high efficiency in transition or vs. full-court pressure. In the half court, she shields the ball from defenders on her drives and navigates for scores. Off the ball, Reagan is an effective set shooter from mid-range or the 3-point line when the ball is reversed to her, and she scores with swing-through drives against aggressive defenders. She displays a mid-range floater over taller defenders and shoots pull-ups off the dribble at a high percentage. Reagan shows a willingness to crash the offensive glass for second shots. On the offensive side, improving her ability to finish with her left hand will give her more attack options and will make her more difficult to guard at the next level.

Reagan has uncommon wingspan/length at her height and forces several on-ball turnovers with deflections at the front of the press. A tenacious perimeter defender, Reagan can force a speed dribble, then chase to recover and/or steal from behind. She has good anticipation on the 2nd row of the press, and turns any steal into a conversion for her team. Her greatest area of growth on the defensive end will be on the help-side boxing out larger players and tracking rebounds, competing for position in emergency situations in the post, and drawing charges. As Reagan's physical strength improves during her high school career, so will her level of physicality inside.
