-Introduction-

I would like to start that Misery/Orfeo has a habit of changing names and pronouns often, as of the editing (9/01/26) of this document I will be referring to them with their current name and set of pronouns which are They/It.
They are known to bounce from fandom to fandom, but they're active mostly in IDV, Roblox, Toontown, Postal, and Outlast spaces.
Misery has an ordeal of mental, physical and irl issues that make things relatively difficult for them, however this is no excuse for any behavior demonstrated in this document.

Please do not go out of your way to harass or contact the individual after the viewing of this, block and move on. I do not condone any sort of vigilante bullshit on my behalf or harassment. This is merely meant to spread awareness for others to be cautious.

My name is Atom/Lapis, I would be considered one of Misery's exes. In this document I'll be discussing the things I've personally experienced with this user as someone that's been in touch with them since about mid/late 2019 I'd say. I myself have my own disorders and mental illnesses that make things difficult for me, and while I have done immature and petty things after the relationship, Misery has yet to apologize or actively acknowledge behavior that has actively harmed others.

I'm writing this to tell my story and to debunk some of their many lies. I've got absolutely nothing to gain from this other than to warn people of someone with a history of erratic, unhealthy behavior; my intentions are to be as honest and transparent about this as possible.

This document is still technically “premature”, there are more disgusting behaviors yet to be discussed.

I'm aware some of this can come across as interpersonal grievances or “relationship” drama, but I can assure you other victims have come through with similar experiences. Their documents will be listed near the bottom of this document.

-Race-faking and Contextual information-

Prior to the pandemic, they had never once claimed to be of any sort of marginalised race or having family of other ethnicities. They knew and always brought up how their ancestry however was German, Irish and the basic European-Canadian bloodline with some Jewish members as well, if i remember correctly.

Sometime later into the pandemic, early 2021 is when they would later start claiming to be Mexican, claiming so while bringing up a trip they took over to the country with their family and feeling "connected".

Now, nothing is wrong with feeling connected to the area around you through its beauty and scenes — but what is wrong is to claim to be an entirely different race and ethnicity than you actually are when you weren't born in Mexico, nor were you raised with Mexican culture.

Accompanied by not just the reasoning of "feeling connected", but also with a backstory that was completely fabricated, a backstory that would swap from forceful to purposeful skin bleaching/scrubbing from his biological mother/themself to make up for their obvious lack of melanin while claiming to be a person of color.
A full body bleaching would result in patchy and uneven pigmentation in the skin, and can even cause damage. They have no signs of patchy, uneven pigmentation anywhere as they are near translucent.
Pictures taken of themself throughout the years show non-patchy white skin.

What's weirder, if their mother or father was either Mexican (neither are) would there not be other family members with tan skin they claimed they once had? because not a single one shares this olive or brown skin they claim themself to have.

This would lead them into feeling the need to reaffirm their so-called Mexican identity into everything. Trouble spelling things? "English isn't my first language!"
(It is. They were born in a majorly English/French speaking province and has no severe trouble speaking it fluently. Just has some learning disabilities that make reading/writing hard like dyslexia and autism)
They would also use this as a prevalent excuse to say the B-slur, more so within voice chats than in text; not sure if it was them knowing full well anything text wise could be screenshot.

despite having later claimed to be Mexican, on the same tiktok account; just around the start of its use do they admit to being white along with an apology for using an African folk song.

With this new found identity as a Mexican, they would also go on tangents that would go on from cultural appropriation, what kind of portrayals of Mexicans are acceptable and what aren't.

They specifically made complaints about a widely speculated (fandom-consensus) Irish-Mexican character, Norton Campbell, and how certain artists may depict him. nothing wrong with trying to not make him a racist caricature, or to at least get some of his character traits right, that is until you start misusing terms and make yourself sound like an idiot.

going so far as to say making Mexicans hairy is a stereotype. although, a lot of latine/indigenous people ARE and embrace/try embracing their natural body hair as it's something they've been shamed for by colonists for years.

misusing the term colorist, when mentioning people being rude towards artists that may depict him with his in game skin tone. (are these people being rude in the room with us?) Whereas to be colorist means when people do the opposite of what he said. Colorism is to favour the lighter coloured skin-tones of people of a racial group.

While yes, it is not to say that light skinned people of colour don't face discrimination of their own, they aren't facing it to the same degree as their darker skinned brothers and sisters. So to say it's colorist when non-existent people bash artists for giving Norton his in-game skin tone is so tone-deaf, when you're willing to defend the likeness of paleness over brown skin; KNOWING artists are way more likely to be harassed over giving a character any darker shades of skin tones, than they are to give the same character their in-game skin tone.

While the overall post spreads some light on Nortons overall ethnicity and background, to parade yourself as someone who is of the same ethnicity to seem as some know-all of what it means to be Latine is.. in itself very colonist-like!

- My experience -

During a fall out between them and I, I had admitted to immaturely handling the situation especially in regards to poor mental health and also because of improper communication from Misery''s side, as they have always failed to thoroughly communicate with their partners.

During the summer of 2022 is when we initially broke up. At the time, although struggling with my gender identity, I was a gay cis-passing trans man and Misery had come to the conclusion they were actually lesbian and felt uncomfortable being with me as they wanted to respect my identity and I too wanted to respect theirs. So we opted to be friends instead.

During this time we would continue to play games such as roblox and identity v while in voice chat with our friends at the time.
Misery still used pet names such as "dear", "love", "hun"; I reciprocated. This made things uncomfortable for the both of us, so we had a talk about it in our personal server, to talk about boundaries and the possibility of a break; explaining on my end that the only reason I had called them “hun” and “dear” was because they had been the one to start doing so towards me.

Only for Misery to say in rebuttal "it's British slang". Yes, let's use "British slang" as an excuse and to deflect accountability for using such names on me that actively confused me. No one calls their fresh ex "love", "dear", or "hun". When that was immediately pointed out, it wasn't something Misery seemed to like. At all. How dare the other party get hurt by mixed signals that were never cleared up until the very last second? and until that last second, without any warning or preparation, kicked me out of every single shared server which lead to an inevitable spiral downwards because I didn't fully know what I did wrong.

if I remember correctly, I had made a post saying "When you mess things up with your fp" (favorite person) because, admittedly I felt like I had messed up and I didn't want to directly say ex because that would've been way too obvious. FP was vague enough so I could actually get my feelings out without anyone actually knowing it was them. Admittedly immature, they either viewed my account after kicking me or it popped up on their tl and saw it, was the one to engage with ME after kicking me from the servers after our discussion.

See how I'm replying to the original (since then deleted bc I didnt want the memory) which was my own post and how im not the one engaging with them?

After awhile I would be slowly gathering all my thoughts and process everything that ever happened to me in the relationship, talking to friends and close family about all that had happened between me and Misery, especially after such a rough end to it all I began to realise that maybe they weren't as great as I foolishly allowed myself to believe.

Afterall, I blindly supported them and enabled their every whim, they were technically all I had that felt somewhat stable in my already overwhelming life, and I had felt bad for them after all the things I've seen happen to them in previous servers and communities. But looking back now I've come to realize a lot of their issues were a result of their own doing for being a relentlessly rude and petty person to people within public online spaces.

Of course I was still hesitant to rightfully voice my complaints about them and how they acted prior, during and after the relationship, because I had first hand witnessed how manipulative and controlling they can be.

I remember a little later down the line feeling more comfortable venting about them on my account, that would later be private because the situation was relatively still fresh, and I wanted to warn my friends and mutuals about their behaviour especially since they lie about their race/ethnicity, and have a pattern of stalking others and refuse to take accountability.

I had thought I would be free to vent and verbalize my concerns and frustrations over the years, especially with them no longer following me. But I was wrong! They had some of their own friends following my account still and sending them forth every vent I had made and made them out to paint me as a racist.

I would be contacted by the owner of an IDV server in regards to my behaviour and I explained the entire situation to them, giving necessary context to sort out the situation between us.

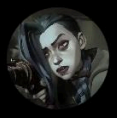

In the server we used to be a kreacher main, so the owner refers to us as such.

[redacted] 17/08/2022 20:34
hey hey kreacher, can i have a talk with you real quick?

weirdgrrrl 17/08/2022 20:34
sure!

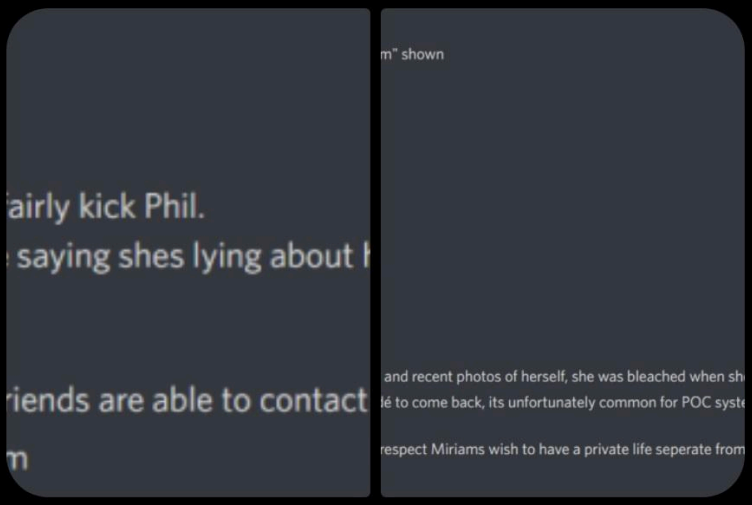

[redacted] 17/08/2022 20:35
seems like you miriam broke up and they told me a few things about you, but as a mod server i must know the two sides of the story

weirdgrrrl 17/08/2022 20:36
yes. we did break up, if you don't mind what did they tell you about me because..
idk things have been insane lately regarding them and I'm trying my best tk just not interact or allow them to milk reactions out of me

yeah, i'm sorry for bringing things up, it's just that they said they werent comfy being in the server with you and i get both your sides, but i can't just kick members like that these sound like serious accusations, that's why i wanna know your side and honestly, since this is a personal problem between you two, it would be better if somehow you both could talk it out :[me as a mod want to keep peace in the server, but also the topic seems too personal you know?

The solution was to make up. An attempt was made, but it was only Misery's alter that I talked with, not Misery themself.

Again, all blame was set onto me and no effort of reconciliation was made on their side at all; not an apology for such outlandish behavior and using their alters to speak to me instead of it coming from their own. I had been the only one that had to apologize, as if the years of ableism, emotional and verbal abuse, lovebombing and gaslighting I have had to endure just did not exist to them.

Other problematic behaviors some will be of my own personal observations as well as what others have experienced within the toontown community.

Debunking the message they sent to me through an ex-friend after i had asked same ex-friend if i could deliver an apology through them:

The relationship did not "consist of me fucking up", the only things I "messed up" within the relationship was vocal stimming in voice chats, sometimes accidentally being too loud in voice chats and being reprimanded by both them and our other partner for stimming. for fucks sake we even had a music bot to play music, Misery could sing but anytime I did they didn't like it.

This is quite literally the ONLY thing I can think of that I would have "messed up". Unless it was also warning people of proshippers by retweeting callouts/warnings and having been told that it's exhausting to see.

No "big pity parties" were thrown. I'm at quite a loss of words nor do I even know how to expand on this because I don't ever remember doing such a thing.
Unless it's in reference to my vents, where all i asked for was reassurance that I am not a burden/nuisance, because i often felt like I was only ever tolerated.

I apologized – and apologize to this day – "constantly" because I come from a place of sincerity and empathy. Also having grown up in and escaped living in a neglectful and emotionally abusive environment. So, if I came across as "Overwhelming" for feeling an immense amount of guilt and empathy anytime I happened to be an inconvenience to you, that is on you. If I had known vocal stimming was an overwhelming "mistake" you had to hide from me for my own "well being" then maybe you shouldn't have been dating an autistic person. I also go "silent" in voice chats because I am horrible at verbal communication half the time. I prefer text whenever I find I cannot get the right words out vocally. I am more than certain I have previously stated that as well in voice chats after having to send things in text that I otherwise couldn't have said out loud.

There have been times I've gone silent because of frustration and needed time to just cool down, I at least had the dignity to step away from the game for a bit before yelling and crying at my supposed friends.
Me needing time and space to self soothe before I get too mad at a game is not the equivalent of throwing a pity party, when I'm looking out for myself and so I don't unreasonably lash out at my friends. Especially when all they had done was make fun of me for not being good at playing hunter in idv, or knowing how to kite since I don't play competitively or often. 🤷‍♀️

This all is projection I've come to find because they get into shitty drama, oversteps boundaries of others and gets frustrated at games to the point they would lash out at us for every little thing, even things we didn't do ourselves would somehow also be our problem. Actively making us feel bad for anything that happened to them.

Anytime they experienced the consequences of their actions, they would come crawling to me for EVERYTHING, to white knight them, to encourage them, to even fucking enabling them; There were times I've called them out while in the midst of them adding fuel to the fire, finding out that I was whiteknighting them on tiktok without realizing they straight up just told a person to kill themselves over an audio; where when I found that out through the exact users they were telling it to, I told them to go and apologize. They went silent and ignored me after an attempt to defend themself in our vent channel.

They are too used to having their toxic behaviors being enabled, that when called out they will do anything to defend their own actions, making mental gymnastics or even dramatising and exaggerating a situation to paint themself as the victim and innocent party.

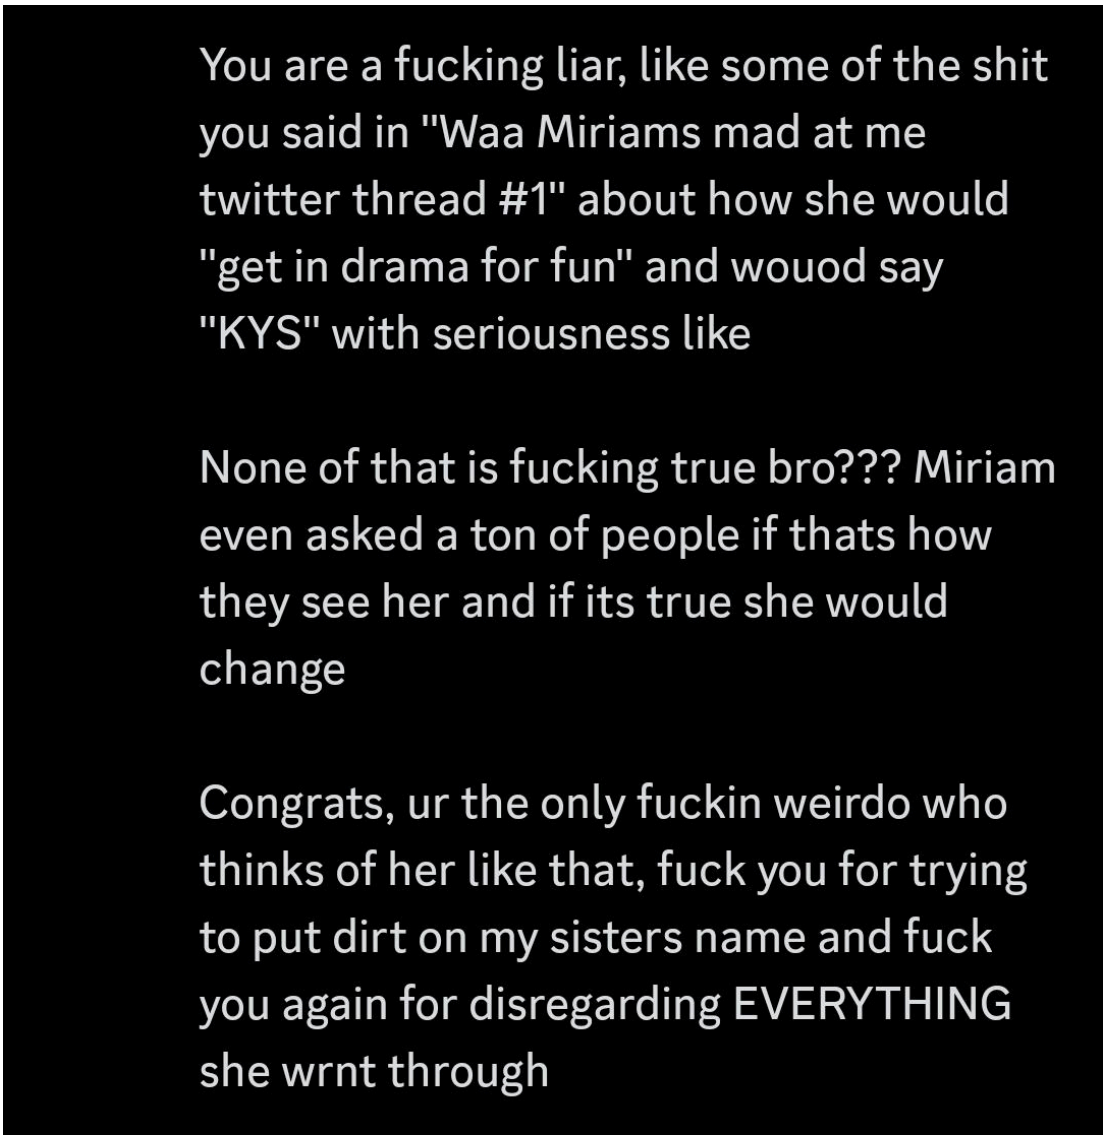

Consistent participation in drama:

- It's almost as if it's something they breathe, yet when they get any sort of backlash they come crawling back like an injured dog to get support from others, regardless if the stranger on the internet is actually wrong or right, they will say whatever to get people on their side. That incident on tiktok where they were fighting with two users in regards to an audio, is a good example of this.

- Any time someone even slightly pisses them off, or they find a moment to drag a situation farther than it should, which inevitably ends into a spiral of "hey don't do that", "maybe you should let it go" to which they just ignore because they couldn't care less about you needing to lift them back up, after crying how stressful drama is.

- They cannot handle dealing with the consequences they've plated themselves with and will find any way to get out of dealing with those consequences, because they refuse to actually take a step back and analyse themselves and their behaviour

- They have been known to make multiple alternative accounts on multiple social media sites, a lot are old and untouched; but without a doubt can and could be used for stalking others. Some of these accounts have been used especially for drama, having been apart of a Deviantart tracer scandal. While this was years ago, it gives an insight to their constant involvement and almost desire to be the centre of attention.

- screenshot of a message their alter sent, calling the old host a liar for speaking out about what he legitimately saw Misery do.
This is funny to me, because immediately after, getting into the toontown fandom, they would get outed for these exact things. Getting into drama for fun, telling people to kill themselves or hurt themselves. They deflect because they don't want to admit that they've done horrible, shitty things to others and think they get to just walk all over others just because they dislike them or feel they were talked to in the wrong manner.

And not to mention, of course our old friends would not see you as such an awful person. They have not seen what goes on behind close doors with you half the time, because if they did they would clearly not want to be around you.

Anti-semitism/Nazi glorification/sympathy:

- I remember them being inspired at one point from their ancestry as well as their interest in werewolves/vampires that he would combine the macabre fantasy within the quite real setting of nazi Germany. Creating a character that was a nazi soldier and werewolf, also known as Lycans. This character would be used in roleplays and other pieces of media, the only other media I can remember is Boyfriend To Death.

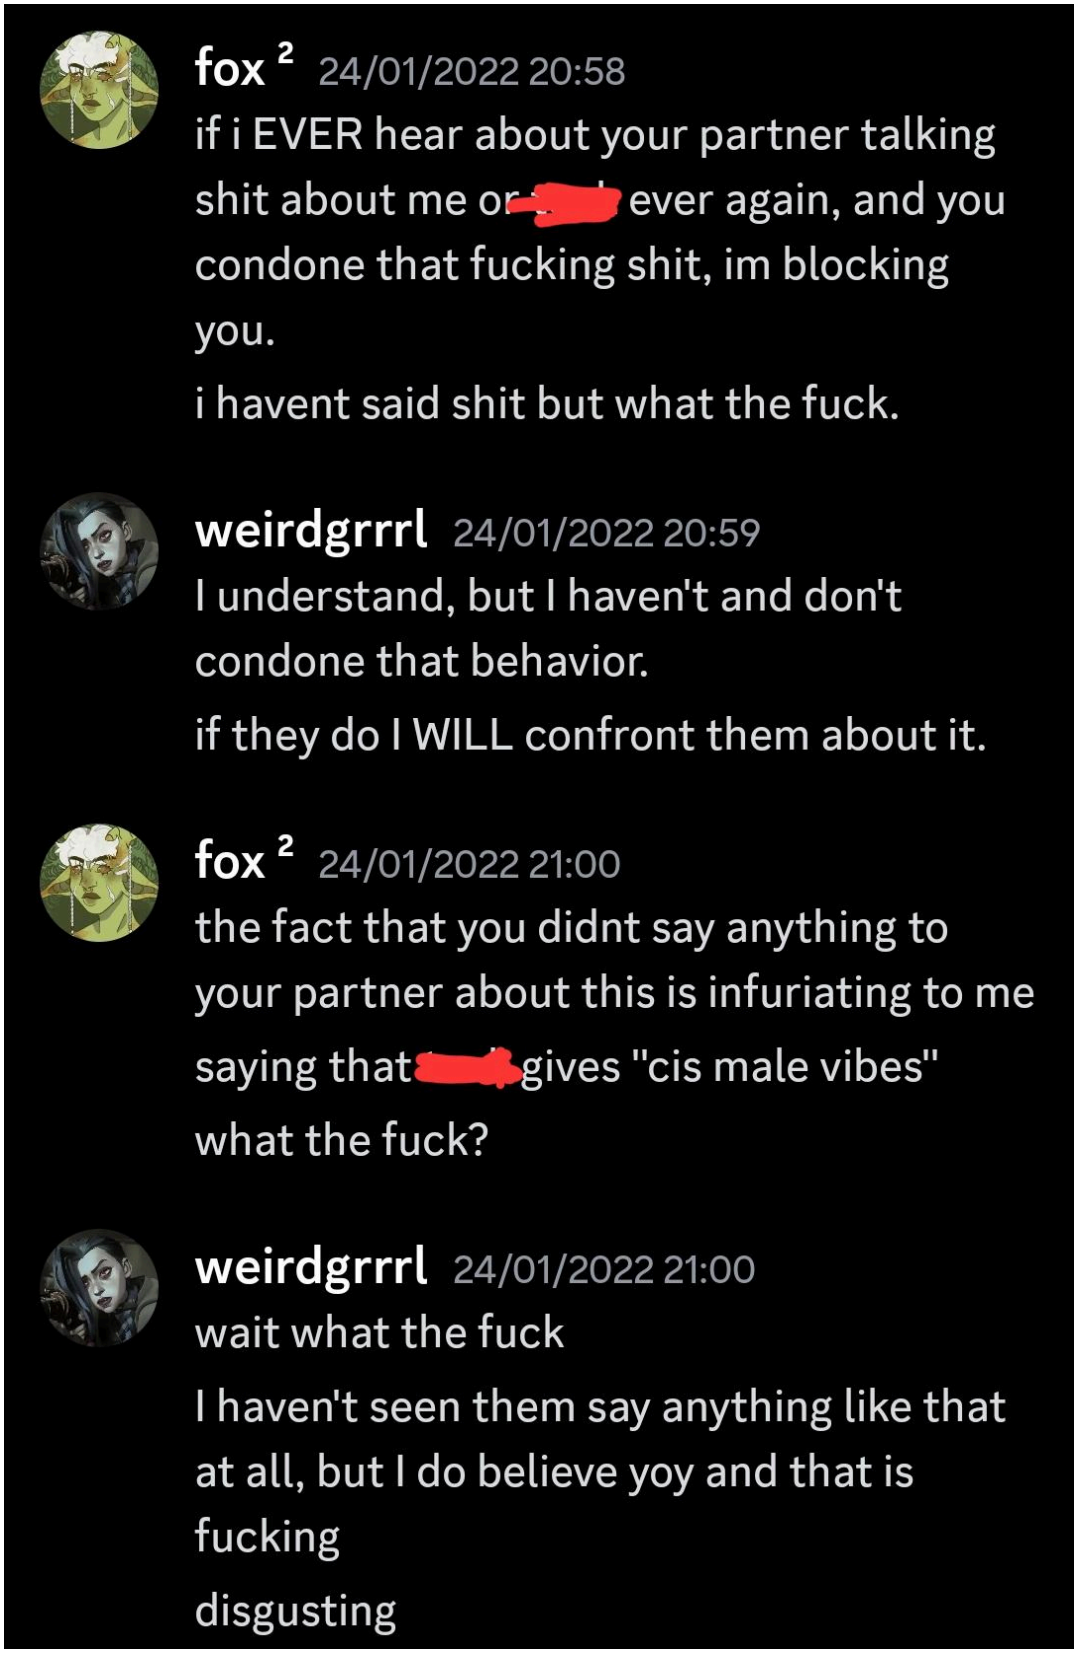

- The Characters appearance consisted of a scrawny, sickly pale man with light blonde hair and bright blue eyes. (Wow, sounds familiar..)

- Remember the Umbrella soldiers from skullgirls? Well, considering their likeness to nazi soldiers, it was just another thing for them to idolize and enjoy. Theres liking uniforms and then theres liking the uniforms of those that represented genocide and hate.

Transphobic Behavior:

Now some of this is hearsay, but it's better to be wary than not.. Reports started when our partner at the time showed interest in my irl friends online friend group, befriending almost everyone in there as well as someone who was a trans feminine enby, someone just days before they were to put on oestrogen. We'll keep their name private since they're not apart of this. Let's say, Teal is their name.

Anyhow, jealousy was high of course, and Misery didn't like the time spent with others aside from them. But this was wholly on Misery for making playing anything with them miserable. It would be brought to my attention by my IRL friend that Misery had said Teal gave off "cisman" vibes.

It's hard for me to remember what the exact words we traded were, but I immediately went to Misery after this was brought to my attention in our personal server. What I do remember is them denying it ever happened and shutting things down quickly before I could ask for more context.

My memory is very poor due to amnesia and dissociation, but I can vaguely confirm that this was something Misery had said in a server made for them, myself and our other partner J.

On a new account, Misery had visited my tiktok account with no further actions done on the date July 31st 2024. I took it upon myself to immediately block their acc as soon as I saw them view my account.

Here is a testimony from a friend of mine that had known Misery a lot longer than I did. I've been friends with this user since we were both tweens, I have no reason to doubt his experience especially when I was partially there for him in some aspects of this experience. Was tired during this conversation so some confusion is present as we are discussing things.

- Litigoats experience

idgaf enough to make an actual proper response but redd is a piece of shit, an emotionally abusive ass, and even had an entire callout doc before he started saying shbit about me LOL. this isnt in order its just what i think abt when i think abt it cuz again idgaf

^ i wrote scapegoat & redd father son stuff before i even met this guy and before he was even in the fandom way back in may 2022. and he asked to see it one day / or i offered it to him bc he was talking about wanting to read a clo/reader mother son thing and so i sent it to him. never once fucking treated him like his canon self lol. am i supposed to just stop writing stuff i like just cuz of that?? he said he liked the stuff i wrote anyway. and i never said the dead dad jokes to his face. it was always when he was either lurking or not in chat bc ive been saying them from even before i met him. this ranges from playing tag in clash general (pinging a user and going tag youre it, and when it eventually comes back to me i go @atticus tag youre it!!) to when i posted an img of litigator in the floor due to a bug and said "omg hes going to see atticus!!"

and he never said he was a fictive before i met him, he always said he was an irl which is extremely anti recovery and i was calling him out for that in our PRIVATE SERVER after he left after making fun of all of us and me for having an autistic meltdown, not to his face. i should know bc i was extremely delusional in the past and it was hell. craig most likely sent him the messages after prn left and thats a whole nother person who fucking made fun of me for being autistic but i can talk about that later.

To Misery.

Misery, this isn't an attempt in "canceling" you or trying to run you off the internet. This is solely so you and others have a better idea on the sort of behavior you're capable of, the kind of behavior you should be able to change for the better. And I sincerely wish you can change for the better, but with both past and current actions it's obvious you have no motivation to change or to make up for actions that have caused harm.

You can continuously claim I'm the one stalking you all you like, but YOU are the one here constantly making new accounts, new usernames — bypassing any means of me blocking you and KEEPING you blocked.
You stalk my tiktok, you stalk my tumblr, you stalk my twitter! And I'm fucking sick of how you can't just keep to one account and stay the fuck away from me.

You also can no longer use the claim that I have been racist towards you anymore, as it's obvious you no longer cling onto this "mexican" identity that you made up potentially for oppression points. And I am disgusted still at the fact you would dare compare me calling you out for being racist and lying about your race to using blood quantum to determine the validity of my indigenous identity, when it's been something I had struggled to accept for a long time, and I at the very least can prove how close my lineage is despite being pale. Metis, mixed or not, are still native.

No amount of guilt-tripping can get you out of this or make me change my stance on you. You have caused tremendous amounts of harm, anxiety and trauma for a lot of people and have absconded scot-free from any and all consequences.
Such Actions cannot be simply ignored.

You purposefully isolated me after our break up. I had barely anyone to turn to in the end aside from one or two dear friends of mine, and mutuals on twitter. You demonized me and painted me under false pretenses, projecting your own faults and the faults of our mutual ex wholly onto me.

I am not responsible to protect your lies anymore.

If you are aware of and have read the document, and its true you wish to contact me to apologize then by all means do so. But do not have anyone else come to white knight you, and i want things to be between us and to remain civil. I will accept an apology but I will not make deals or compensations, this doc will remain up even until then.

Message from Editor to Misery.
I'm sure you know who we are based on the edits made alone.
I'm disappointed because I believed in you, up until I met these wonderful people.
People who told me that what you did to us is a pattern.
A pattern that's lasted for many years.
I'm sorry I ever befriended you, I've seen the hurt of all of these individuals, and I hate to say it but you've done the same to us, then deleted the evidence the second you got the chance.
I'm making my own document, to be added here, of what you've done to my headmates, and what your buddies did to them as well.
You have your racist, ableist hatespiral group. You're exactly where you want to be.
Please accept that when someone blocks you, it's not an invitation to block evade on a new account (Federal Stalking Statute, 18 U.S. Code § 2261A & Canadian law, Section 264), it means you are not wanted there. Please take time to better yourself, offline.
I know your situation and I know you don't want legal action. These people are well within their right to testify against you in the court of law if they so pleased.
Take my advice, please log off.
