What to consider before purchasing the best travel guitar

Getting your dream best travel guitar is not walking into a guitar shop and picking randomly whatever pleases your eyes. There is more to it than what you see. Below, we've shared some of the crucial things you must have in mind if you want a travel guitar that will meet your demands. Check them below

Acoustic vs. Electric

You will have two options to choose from. The acoustic guitar is slightly large when compared to the electric type. You will need to choose carefully to have the look and feel of a regular guitar. Note that the acoustic types do not play silently and would be at a disadvantage when in a crowded area or a quiet hotel where everybody yearns for peace.

An electric guitar for travel is super small, making it easy to pack and travel with. In most cases, you have sections where you can plug your amp and play. Moreover, you have the options to play it silently through the headphones. This allows you to train silently and enjoy the cool sound.

Still, on the electric guitar, you need to have the power plug unless you have the battery type. This produces a shapelier sound full of energy. The only disadvantage with the electric types is a power outage that can keep your moods low.

If you enjoy both electric and acoustic, you can have the electric guitar with a piezo bridge. This will see you play silently but still feel the acoustic tone.

Size, weight, and portability

When you are traveling, anything cumbersome can leave you feeling sickly. This is the reason why you need to observe the size, weight, and, most importantly, your guitar's portability.

Obviously, a small-sized best guitar for travel will fit in the gig bag correctly without altering the tone settings. The compact design also aids in smooth transportation and storage. A lightweight guitar is a dream come true for frequent travelers.

One of the popular lightweight travel guitars we incorporated in our review is the Traveler Guitar Ultra-Light Acoustic-Electric Travel Guitar. You will love the feather-like feeling when traveling. It is also stress-free when you decide to fit it in the plane storage sections.

Both size and weight determine the ease of portability. We recommend a lightweight guitar if you are set to enjoy a stress-free trip.

Quality built

You want to invest where you see the value, and this is why quality matters a lot. The materials used during the crafting of the travel guitar are also crucial. Most of the guitar comes from wood, especially mahogany. This explains the lightweight nature and durability.

Mahogany is also classy and brings out the quality you would love to see on travel guitar. The strings are still crucial when it comes to quality. We have nylon types and metal types. Choose the strings depending on your guitar type and play style. Overall, choose the best quality strings that will see you spend some time without replacing them.

Fretboard size

We have full-sized and reduced sized fretboards. Full-sized makes your best guitar for travel feel like a regular guitar. When you reduce the size of the guitar, the fretboard retains its size, and that is why it feels like a regular guitar that will not give you a hard time on the playing section.

On the other side, guitars with a small fretboard look minimal and balanced. You will have a different experience with a reduced size. Some guitarists find them great, while others feel like it compromises sound quality due to adjusting size.

The price and warranty

Before you acquire a travel guitar, you have a budget to follow. If you are looking for a costly travel guitar, then have an open budget. If you are on a strict budget, you will find a few options to pick your travel guitar.

You should pick a guitar that fits into your budget but still provides the required results. Avoid cheap quality guitars that will last you for a few days and break down. Regarding the warranty, find out if the manufacturer is available to caution you in case of defects resulting from manufacturing. This will help you claim for a refund or exchange.

Why own a travel guitar?

If you are a traveling musician, you know how boring it is to sit and do nothing. A travel guitar gives you company, and you perfect your skills.

Travel guitar is small, lightweight, and portable. Unlike other huge guitars that you will not carry alongside you, the travel types come in a sizable fit to suit traveling.

If you hate the airport restrictions concerning bulky goods, a travel guitar is a minimalist that will find itself in the plane thanks to the small size.

You still get a full-scale outcome you would have had on a full guitar. This allows you to play the guitar without altering the quality.
