General guidance

References are necessary to substantiate and acknowledge the source of the literature that you present in your work. For example you may reference literature in order to:

- Support the use of factual information
- Illustrate a point of discussion / argument
- Present a theoretical perspective
- Present an argument or counter argument
- Support your own argument or counter argument

Under no circumstances should another person's material or ideas be presented without acknowledging them as the source – failure to do is deemed as plagiarism and your work will be referred for academic misconduct.

A reference list details in alphabetical order (by surname) all the references you have referred to directly in your work. This is required at the end of your work.

A bibliography details in alphabetical order (by surname) all the literature of relevance to your work that you have read but which you have not referred to directly in your work. This is not required at the end of your work.

The particular referencing style you should use is the Harvard Style of referencing. There are many variations of the Harvard style and the version used for this course is based on the guidance in Pears, R. and Shields, G. J. (2016) Cite them right: the essential referencing guide. London: Palgrave Macmillan (Palgrave study skills).

The Harvard style of referencing requires you to give two kinds of information:

(a) a citation within the main text and (b) a full list of references at the end of your text which includes detailed publication information.

Where to find publication information

Do not depend on the cover of the book. The title page should always be consulted for details of the author, full title and volume number if there is one. The date, edition, place of publication and publisher are usually found on the back of the title page. Remember you can always check your online library account for a record of the books you have taken out. This will also contain the publishing details of the book.

How to use in-text citations

Indirect (paraphrasing / summarising other authors' ideas)

When you are referring to someone else's work but not quoting it directly, you should give just the surname of the author(s) followed by the year of publication, all in brackets, with a comma between the surname and year, e.g.:

..... It has been argued that good and poor readers are taught differently (Jones, 2016). Or...

Jones (2016) argued that good and poor readers were taught differently.

Note: use of just the surname and year is a simplified version of Cite Them Right.

Direct (quoting another author word for word)

To avoid any accusation of plagiarism it is particularly important to distinguish your own text from direct quotations from another author. When you quote directly from someone else's text, you still include the name and date as above, but you should also give the page reference.

If the quotation is less than a line long, it can be included in the body of your text in inverted commas (single). Any longer quotations, should be set out separately, indented, without the use of inverted commas.

Examples of direct quotes

Referencing a short quotation in the line of text

For Jones, who favours a phonic approach, the text for the beginning reader must expose children to 'the sense appeal of alliteration, onomatopoeia, rhyme and rhythm' (2012, p.45).

Referencing a longer quotation as an indented block

Children also showed different ways of making sense of the reading process:

Children in the study convincingly demonstrated that learning is linked to a person's individuality. They all exhibited likenesses in their physical, emotional and intellectual functioning.

(Smith, 2015, p.56)

Writing style

If you have already identified the author immediately before your quotation do not include the author's name in your citation, e.g:

Slobin makes the distinction between 'notions that are obvious to the sense and those which, on the contrary, can only be learned through language' (2017, p.24).

How to use this guide

This guide will give examples of how to reference different types of sources, (e.g. books, journal articles). For each type of reference there is an example of an indirect in-text citation and the reference list. If the source you have used is not included in the guide or if you need some more help there are copies of the 'Cite them right' book in the Library.

In the examples that follow, the punctuation and italicisation should be followed exactly. The use of ibid is not accepted in this referencing style. Generally, the latest edition of the work should be referenced unless a specific reason is identified in the text for using an older reference.

Section 1 – Books (printed and Ebooks)

Citation order:

- Author / editor
- Year of publication (in round brackets)
- Title (in italics)
- Place of publication: Publisher
- Series and volume number (where relevant)

Book with one author

In-text citation:

This argument was countered by Luck (2015) ...

It can be argued that education is a right for all pupils (Luck, 2015).

Reference list:

Luck, M. (2015) Your student research project. Aldershot: Gower.

Book with two or three authors

In-text citation:

McCarthy and Hatcher (2002) suggest that...
Presentation skills are important (McCarthy and Hatcher, 2002).

Reference list:

Electronic books (ebooks)

When an ebook looks like a printed book, with publication details and page numbers, you should reference as a printed book.

Section 2 – Book chapters or sections of edited books

Citation order:

- Author of the chapter/section (surname followed by initials)
- Year of publication (in round brackets)
- Title of chapter/section (in single quotation marks)
- 'in' plus author/editor of book
- Title of book (in italics)
- Place of publication: publisher
- Page reference

In-text citation: (as above for number of authors)

This argument was countered by Smith (2012) ...

It is apparent that ... (Smith, 2012).

Reference list: (as above for number of authors)

Section 3 – Journal articles (printed and electronic)

Journal articles may be available only in print, available only online or available in both print and online. When you reference a journal article it is important to reference the version you are using.

Citation order:

- Author (surname followed by initials)
- Year of publication (in round brackets)
- Title of article (in single quotation marks)

- Title of journal (in italics – capitalise first letter of each word in title, except for linking words such as and, of, the, for)
- Issue information, that is, volume (unbracketed) and, where applicable, part number, month or season (all in round brackets)
- Page reference (if available)
- Available at: URL (if required) (Accessed: date) OR doi (if available)

Journal article printed and electronic with one author

In-text citation:

This argument was countered by Seymour (2013) ...

Section 4 – Multiple references

Multiple references within an In-text citation should be listed chronologically (earliest date first) and separated by semicolons e.g. (Shaw, 2011; Gordon et al., 2013; Harper and Lee, 2013). If published in the same year, they should be listed alphabetically.

Multiple references by the same author published in the same year should be distinguished by adding lower case letters (a, b, c etc.) after the year.

In-text citation:

Section 12 – Secondary references (citing from another source)

You may be referring to a source that is mentioned or quoted in another piece of literature. This is known as secondary referencing. It is important and preferred that you cite and reference the primary source of your information. For example, if you read about research conducted by Jones (primary source) in a book by Smith (secondary source) you should try to locate the original work by Jones. This will ensure that Smith has not misquoted or misrepresented another author's work. If you cannot locate the original work you cannot include it in your reference list and you can only cite it in the text.

In-text citation:

Jones (2004, cited in Smith 2016) provides a much needed...

Reference list:

If you are unable to access and read the primary source this will remain as cited only in the text and the secondary source is included in the reference list according to reference type.
