Encyclopedia of Philosophy (Link) Wikipedia (link) Nihilism (link)

Ontology= the study of the "nature of being"

Late 19th and early 20th century thinkers and writers. Created the philosophy known as Existentialism.

Camus:

Sees a world "silent god"

"A universe unspeakingly indifferent"

Indifference is something we laboriously arrive at.

When we discover the indifference of the universe it brings wisdom

The absurd = indifference of the universe, "reasonless universe"

Camus is writing about life.

An internal life

Man has desire, plans, intentions

A conscience awareness

Absurd: describes this universe

He sees man as a duality of thought and intention.

Universe has no reason or purpose

He argues man need to live and focus on the meaning that is important to man.

Existentialism is a philosophy: A philosophy is an explanation of how life is organized.

It's a way of life, a kind of organizational structure. If you have a philosophy you are guided by ideas that inform your life, your thoughts, and your actions, your perspective/perceptions. This also affects your emotions.

Existentialists believe in these basic ideas:

They think about human existence/life

They explain human thought as entirely created by humans.

They argue that there is no god or higher being that creates man or what man thinks.

They argue nothing is predetermined, people have no destiny or luck or any outside metaphysical (above the physical world) force.

Man is responsible for his actions.

Life is random = concept of "The Absurd" (things happen for no reason)

The only thing that is real is that we exist.

Life has no purpose by itself... Except the purpose that the person decides.

Man is free to choose his own purpose or not choose to have one at all.

Purpose/meaning of life, to the existentialists, is determined by the individual.

Purpose/meaning are ideas, thoughts or cognitions.

Existentialists believe that only meaning that humans believe, are all man made.

Humans create their own meaning.

When man contemplates his existence it brings anxiety, worry, and depression.

According to the existentialists the only way to end anxiety, worry and depression about your existence is to accept and make choices to find your own meaning.

Kierkegaard, Nietzsche, Dostoevsky – discussed concept of meaning of life or inexistence, of being

Jean-Paul Sartre, Albert Camus... are main thinkers and authors

Phenomenology- deals with self-awareness

"Nothing fixes our purpose but we ourselves, our projects have no weight or inertia except for our endorsement of them."

Religion

Religion is meaningful in itself, but not beyond in any metaphysical (beyond the physical) sense.

Existentialists say there is no God, but people can believe in God if they choose to.

Sartre emphasizes existentialism is "a philosophy of action in defining oneself"

"...Examines mortal man's search for meaning in a meaningless universe"

Concept of The Absurd

Absurdity = randomness, things happen for no reason.

We have no control, things happen for no reason.

This concept suggests that we (people) try and try to make things happen that we want to happen and avoid things we don't want to happen and sometimes things just happen.

Existentialists believe that random occurrences happen with no reason and these things are part of human experience. That's it.

Unfairness of the world

Unfairness is a large part of the absurd. What happens, happens, not because you are a good person or a bad person.

Anything can happen to anyone at any time. There is no reason, things just happen.

The Myth of Sisyphus (link)

Sisyphus the man whose daily routine was pushing a rock up a hill and then when it rolled down, he pushed it up the hill again, in a never-ending toil. This story is a symbol of the absurdity of existence. It also serves as an example, there is no meaning to pushing the rock, it simply is... however Sisyphus does find meaning, for himself.

Existentialism in Short:

There is no force that controls you. You live, you die and that's it. What you do in between is all a matter of choices, and it doesn't really matter what you choose. You could choose to stay in bed or you could break your neck when you're in the shower. Existentialism becomes clear when you recognize this fact. and accept it. If you see that there is no meaning in life, except what the individual human gives it, then you understand human existence as the existentialists understand.

Existential Crisis/The role of Anxiety or Anguish

Angst is nervousness, when we contemplate our future can create angst.

Many people experience anxiety when they are confronted with the idea that we choose our own meaning.

Questioning the existence of god is also a cause of anxiety or anguish.

We get anxiety when we face the end of our existence.

Personal freedom

Individual responsibility

The Crowd
