In order to improve linkages between higher education and the sustainable materials management industry, vertically-aligned efforts between higher ed and the sustainable materials management industry (SMM) are needed. One of the strongest links is offering real-world benefits to off-campus groups while applying students and their faculty's academic work through research papers, independent studies, service learning, class projects, even internships. The intent of this service is to improve these linkages.

Two different applications are described below. Please take the survey appropriate to you or your organization.

More information about creating a successful academic-industry exchange, including examples of typical work can be found in this guide.

Students and Faculty

Students who are upper-division, graduate and recently-graduated, along with faculty members, can connect, through this application, to recycling agencies, organizations, and businesses each committed to offer a rewarding experience. Faculty and campus departments are welcomed to use this service as well.
