

Got toilet paper? Get SensoWash®!

As we experience a shortage of toilet paper occurring across the country, it seems fitting to start changing the American mindset to an alternative bathroom solution - the shower-toilet. According to President of Duravit USA, Tim Schroeder, "How would you clean your hands? Dry paper or water? It's the same thing when you think of a shower toilet; the latter is more hygienic and frankly does a better job." Shower-toilets afford the best in hygienic design and are inherently natural in concept -- cleansing with water is the most natural form of hygiene. For Japanese and Europeans, shower-toilets and bidets have long been a mainstay in cultural ideals surrounding hygiene and bathroom habits. In North America, the United States in particular, shower-toilets are gaining traction as a product deemed a necessity in the luxury bath.

Duravit, a leading manufacturer in ceramic, furniture and wellness solutions for the bathroom, is an industry-leader in shower-toilet design. Offering a variety of these products across their SensoWash® shower-toilet collection, Duravit entered the category of 'toileshing,' as they refer to it, in 2011 with the first SensoWash® shower-toilet designed by Philippe Starck. In the nine years since the German-founded brand began offering shower-toilets to the North American market, a growing level of comfort with this habit-changing and new product has occurred.
