

Intentions Can Provide Honest Justification

When there is no clue we can try to look at the intention. Intention seems to be more important than the action and its results. Love is not an action it's an intention, a feeling, an honest example of love is a relationship between a mother and a child. A mother can be a good mother or poor mother in her duties towards child depending upon her education, background and several other factors but we cannot doubt the intentions of a mother. If she is healthy (physically/mentally) she will definitely work for the welfare of her child and any decision related to her child is backed by this intention.