History: Greenland was by herself for a while until Norway found her quite by accident, sailing and crashing into her shore during a storm. She was fascinated by him since he looked so different than she did at the time, and she was happy that he stayed behind even when the storm was over. He built settlements and took Greenland in; who was a little toddler at the time. He eventually introduced her to another island around her age, named Iceland. The two hit it off and became very close. She was devastated when Norway and Iceland had to leave, and thus she was left all alone again. She invented harpoons and dog-sledding in her youth, trying them out and enjoying seeing her citizens enjoying them too.

In the 1500's, a country named Portugal visited her and spent some time with her, but it wasn't long enough to make much of an impact to her. Soon, Norway Came back, along with a new country named Denmark. She was overjoyed and Denmark took her to live in a new house, a house that not only had him, but Norway, Iceland, and another nation she hadn't met before named Faroe Islands. The nations all lived together quietly for some time. Denmark introduced Greenland to many aspects of his culture, and she didn't question it at first. She learned Danish, her eyes took on a bluish hue, and she sampled all types of food like danishes and cheese that she had never had before. Even when Norway left their house, she was still pleased with the company of Denmark and Iceland. Denmark was like an older brother to her.

Not much happened for a while until WW2 happened. She watched Denmark and Norway fall to Nazi influence and part of her was concerned she'd be next, but the other part was curious about what Nazi rule was like. She nearly got her wish when Germany showed up on her shores and tried to take her over, but America swooped in at the last second and drove Germany away, forcing Greenland to live with him. It was tough-goings, not knowing how her friends were faring, but she managed to get through it. She was allowed to go back home after the war, but got herself into more trouble when America started crashing planes into her territory during the Cold War. She tried to ignore it at first, but it eventually got to a breaking point and she lost the sight in her left eye. She had to wear an eyepatch and didn't spend time with anyone for a while.

Denmark encouraged her to try and get to more nations, and she briefly joined the EU before drawing out. Denmark wouldn't let her join the UN since she was still owned by him, and the two started to work on her freedom. They almost got everything done before the UN announced it was illegal to own other nations, so Denmark was stuck with Greenland and owned her foreign relations.

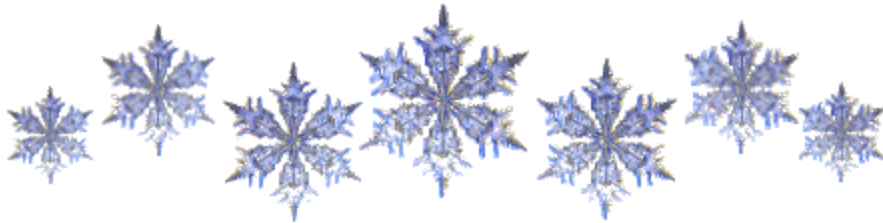

Greenland was absolutely angered and demanded sovereignty, and Denmark tried to cheer her up by allowing her to speak Greenlandic again. But it had been so long since she had spoken it, she had forgotten it. She managed to befriend Canada and America, as well as Denmark's Nordic friends, but refused to branch out.

Nowadays, she's still fighting for independence. People have been underestimating her and ignoring her for so long, and now she has a slew of problems because of it. But now, she's going to make somebody listen. Somebody must, before she literally melts into the ocean.

Personality: There's not much to Greenland, or so people assume. She doesn't stick out much because she's usually standing in corners, watching people. She doesn't really like to talk anyway because years of isolation has rendered her socially awkward and painfully shy around strangers or people she doesn't know very well. If made to talk, she gets extremely anxious, stutters, pukes, then faints on the floor. Luckily, that doesn't happen to her....much. She also has a tendency to worry a lot.

Even around people she knows very well, she doesn't talk much. She does smile a lot more and enjoys their company; she can be very rough-and-tumble and want to run around and chase people. She's a hard worker and feels a strong need to prove her worth to other people. Part of her wants to be taken more seriously and noticed by the other nations. She also loves to help people in need. When she was younger she used to be quite wild and energetic, taking after her older brother. Now she's calmed down a lot, though still wants to be royalty. Nowadays all her energy is focused on trying to be her own person and not just 'Denmark's little sister', and also on trying not to have a mental breakdown. She loves poetry and books about wild adventures.

Relationships:

Denmark: These two used to be extremely close when Greenland was younger, but as they grew older, he asserted more dominance over her and suffocated her to the point where people didn't see her as her own person. She still respects him in a way, as he is her older brother, but she wants to be separate from him and doesn't see him as much as she used to.

Norway: Greenland likes to perform and strengthen her magic around him, as well as go to him whenever something major is wrong, as most of the time he is able to fix it. She admires him and in pushing away Denmark, she spends a lot of time with him and has discovered things about him she never knew before.

Iceland: Iceland is like a twin brother because they were both founded around the same time, though nobody knows who is older. She calls him 'Brother Iceland' and loves to hug-tackle him and play games with him. Whenever she has a problem, she goes to him and often feels like he's the only one who truly understands her out of the Nordics, even more so than Norway or Denmark.

America: America is a good friend of hers and she's grateful to him for not only saving her in WW2, but also for helping her out here and there. However, she has some hidden resent for him ruining her eye in the Cold War.

Canada: The two don't talk much in their time together, but they have that sort of silent relationship where they can just communicate through gestures and still be fulfilled. She finds him amusing.

@She can speak Danish fluently and without an accent. Her English is fairly strong as well, and she is partially fluent in Greenlandic.

@When she's in her own home, she wears a very heavy white snowsuit, but when she's visiting someone else, she wears a pink coat, heavy brown boots, and dark blue pants.

@She wears a matching set of ruby earrings and a ruby necklace because rubies are regularly pulled from the ground in her home. She has also found silver and gold, as well as iron, zinc, etc.

@When she was younger, she was able to fight with a battle axe and was quite scary with it. Nowadays, she has retained the fighting skills but has never had to use them.

@She can play all sorts of traditional Greenlandic instruments and a few Danish ones. She's lately been getting very good at rapping.

@She can perform magic and see magical creatures, much like Norway and Iceland. However, her magic is very shamanic in nature. She can perform nature magic such as making plants bloom and can also make people feel better if they're under the weather. The magical creatures she can see are limited to what appears in her own mythology, though she can sense Norway and Iceland's own creatures' presences.
