The main section of an article should start with an introductory section which provides more details about the paper's purposes, motivation, research methods and findings. The introduction should be relatively nontechnical, yet clear enough for an informed reader to understand the manuscript's contribution.

Literature review (is not written separately from introduction). The literature review is integrated into the introduction and provides a foundational overview of the research topic. It highlights key studies and their contributions to the current understanding of the subject. This contextual framework establishes the relevance and necessity of study.

Key findings from prior research on [insert specific topic] highlight the relevance of this investigation. For instance, [Author Name, Year] demonstrated that [summarize prior research findings]. Building upon this, the present study aims to address [specific research gap]. This section integrates the literature review seamlessly with the introductory remarks, ensuring a cohesive foundation for the study.

Method

This section details the approach used to conduct the research, including descriptions of procedures, tools, and data collection techniques. Each step is thoroughly documented to ensure reproducibility. The methodology outlines the procedures and techniques employed to achieve the research objectives. Following the approach by [Author Name, Year], [describe method briefly]. The study utilized [specific tools, software, or processes] to analyze [data/sample]. Any equations or formulas applied in this research were adapted from existing frameworks, such as [provide formula] (cited from [Source Name, Year]).

Using formula: If there is a formula/equation, please do not forget to cite the source.

Subheading 1 (in method should be italic)

This section begins by presenting subheading in method.

The findings of this research contribute to a deeper understanding of [specific area/topic]. By integrating existing literature with new insights, the study bridges gap identified in earlier works, such as those by [Author Name, Year]. Future research could further explore [suggestions based on findings].
