 Looking Ahead

In this unit you have talked about the future of English and language learning. Read the text below about emoji – the language of the future. Then, talk to a classmate and answer the following questions in your notebook.

The screenshot shows the China Daily website with the article "Embrace the language of the future: Emoji". The article text reads: "Nowadays, there are so many ways for people to communicate. Particularly in today's digital world, the colourful little icons known as emoji have become so popular that almost everyone uses them to express their emotions. In 2015, the Oxford English Dictionary even declared the 'face with tears of joy' as its word of the year. From ordinary people's daily messages to celebrity tweets, a single pictograph or a chain of emoji can speak more than a thousand words. (...)" To the right of the text is a 4x6 grid of various colorful emoji faces. The article is dated 2017-06-08 10:43.

- Do you use a lot of emoji symbols to express your emotions in text messages? Which ones are your favorites?
- Do you agree that "a single pictograph or a chain of emoji can speak more than a thousand words?" In your opinion, which emoji symbols can do it better?
- In your opinion, do emoji symbols replace languages or facilitate more effective communication? Why (not)?

 Think about it!

O texto que você acabou de ler faz parte do China Daily (<www.chinadaily.com.cn>), um jornal diário em língua inglesa publicado na República Popular da China desde 1981. Esse jornal tem a maior tiragem entre os publicados em inglês na China e atende tanto estrangeiros quanto aqueles que desejam aprimorar o inglês. O jornal se destaca também por suas políticas editoriais mais liberais do que as da maioria dos jornais chineses. Na sua opinião, qual é a importância de publicações como esta, que apresentam diferentes perspectivas sobre um assunto?
