

With a tentative agreement in place, we are closing signatures on this letter. The total number of signatures was 1,633. We delivered this letter to the board and district admins three times: on Friday, 9/2 at 300 signatures; on Tuesday, 9/6 at 1,073 signatures, and on Friday, 9/9 at 1,511 signatures. Nobody ever acknowledged receipt of the open letter, though we did get some auto-responses from board email addresses, so we know the letter did arrive at its intended destination.

To: Superintendent Brent Jones, the Directors of the Seattle Public Schools board
CC: The people of Seattle

We support our teachers. They are the glue that keeps our schools together. They have gone above and beyond in responding to the dislocations of the pandemic and its devastating impact on our students. Now, more than ever before, we need to ensure that our teachers and other staff are paid well and given support to do their jobs in the classroom.

We urge you to settle contract negotiations now, on terms that meet what teachers and other educators seek, to ensure that there is no delay to the scheduled start of school on September 7.

Seattle already faces a significant teacher shortage, exacerbated by a high cost of living and high inflation. In order to recruit and retain excellent teachers, we need to compensate them well. SPS needs to agree to a contract that meets educators' compensation needs, in recognition of the vital role they play in our schools and also in our community as a whole.

We also support educators' call for realistic staffing ratios for students receiving multilingual and special education services. We support including those students in general education classrooms whenever possible. To do so effectively, teachers must have support staff at low educator-to-student ratios. We are alarmed at public messaging coming from SPS that suggests such low ratios aren't necessary for quality education. They are necessary, and we expect you to meet SEA's proposals on this matter.

Parents and community members stand ready to join SPS and demand that the state fulfill its paramount duty to fund public education. We also want to see SPS do everything it can, with the resources it currently has, to provide generous staffing ratios and better compensation for educators. For now that could mean using ESSR funds. Although those funds are temporary, new funding will soon become available to support improved staffing ratios for special education.

Our teachers do not want to go on strike. If a strike happens, we will hold you responsible for it as district leaders, and not the teachers. We recognize that any work stoppage will have been the deliberate choice of a Seattle Public Schools leadership that has openly chosen to keep kids out of the classroom rather than accept the very reasonable and sensible proposals that SEA has put on the table during bargaining.

Most nearby districts reached a tentative agreement this year well before the beginning of school. It's already taken far too long, and we're too close to the deadline. But you still have an opportunity and a responsibility to step in and direct the SPS bargaining team to accept SEA's proposals and reach a tentative agreement that allows school to begin as scheduled on September 7.

The whole city is watching.
