

Human Motivators Mission

My current state and why it is painful and frustrating

I am still living the same life as when I joined The Real World one year ago. What has particularly changed is what I have achieved so far (I have some back-end deals and experienced a few sales calls already). What I currently fear is the ability to present myself well on sales calls as an expert and convey trust to the person so they can pay me already on the call. Another thing is school, mainly because it is going to be more time-consuming and I will need to delegate to somebody so I can focus more on business. Additionally, the world isn't in an ideal state to stay broke (with no money) forever, that's why I have to take big action and change toward securing financial freedom in case something happens (like a Chinese virus or some wars near my country). I don't have anything to provide for my loved ones when it comes to my financial aspect- that is one of my weaknesses that always makes me feel ashamed. I'm also isolated from the rest of the people because most of them are not on the same path and I don't want to sense their "energy" that will turn me into a loser again and have zero association with them (it happened a year ago and I'm not looking forward to repeating the same action- took me 9 months to figure this). That is linked to socializing with high-value people in other countries that will open my career to new opportunities. I still haven't mastered copywriting fully yet (I used all the copywriting lessons in Content Creation- and got some awesome social proof for my current clients), however, that would position my skill into a commodity overtime which made me shift back to relearning copywriting as soon as possible. Sooner or later I have to switch to different working devices to be able to travel, so I can get work done anywhere and anytime I want. That leaves me saying that all of it is linked to the ability to provide huge value and position myself as an expert inside my niche.

My future dream state and what makes it desirable/ exciting

3 months from now, my main goal is to reach $10k per month earned and to travel anywhere I want every week to discover new places and talk to interesting high-value people. I'm also looking forward to having sharp-mastered communication skills to get straight to the point and instill trust. I want to provide for all my closest ones, even my chick who is currently waiting for me to take her out on a date. Meeting with Gs is also one of the goals I strive to achieve thanks to the bold action I will take. I'd love to visit Dubai, Tokyo, and Bangkok simply all from my pockets, the hard-earned money that I make through copywriting and content creation. I want to reach the point where my current "agency" would have at least 3-4 high-paying clients to provide service for (I will also want to have at least 1-2 private high-paying clients). Even though I will not be able to quit school, my lifestyle will rank up significantly- taking Uber to school/driving by car, eating in super good restaurants, and working in the lounges where I can meet and talk to like-minded people. Become a person of integrity and position myself as a leader of the tribe, always being certain, charismatic, and strong force to combat all the bad stuff that could happen in 2024. Delegate some schoolwork to fully focus on business and make citizenship + passport in my country (I will have access to travel anywhere I want). Learn how to drive a car like a G- so whenever I rent a car in another country I will be able to ride anywhere on the map. Provide life-changing results for my clients where they will desperately beg me to stay and make their business as a money printing machine and rapidly increase their fortune in business- have an astronomical case study (200%+ in sales) and have money coming every day on my account from % deals/ rev share deals. At this time with the results, I want to start a personal brand for my IG account.