"...Project Psyduck?"

"Yes."

Victor was at a cafe- a very public space where he assumed he would be safe for this meeting. For the most part he never felt like he was in danger, life was in fact great! It was just, Honey was there. And Honey was not exactly what he was call... great. The carrot top man was easily jealous and while Victor didn't think he did anything worth being jealous of, Honey sure did. This insane man has had it out for him since day one and Victor could only assume that it was due to his own insecurities that he was going to get replaced. Obviously he wasn't, Honey was Noir's kid while he lived with Celeste- but they still acted as if they might.

That's why it was strange when they sent him a message saying they had something for him, and even stranger when they tried to sell it to him for 1000 credits. He wasn't being jumped in an alleyway- or having any snarky comments made in his direction. They just genuinely seemed trying to sell him this over priced software. "...What is it?" A software he hadn't properly explained yet either.

Honey didn't waste any time, he swiped at his own TD and a screen was brought up, numerous apps littered it and Victor couldn't help but raise an eyebrow. Everything on this mans screen was Mimikyu themed, from the colours to the apps themselves and Victor saw a few games that he'd played before. "...Have you changed the icons of Angry Spearow to be flying mimikyus-" He asked but as Honey glared at he quickly clammed back up.

They'd definitely changed the icon of Angry Spearow. And every other common game. The one that Honey went to was one with an icon of a psyduck mimikyu fusion. "You forget stuff all the time, right?"

A bit blunt, but true so Victor nodded his head. His memory would easily be considered subpar.

"I made this to help with it. You can give other people access and it will automatically give you reminders for anything they put in." So far it was unimpressive, and Victor raised an eyebrow. They already had things like that so why should he spend 1000 credits on something like that. "But it also has other capabilities, so for example if I take a picture of you." A click sounded and moments later his doubtful face was showing on Honey's TD- alongside words. "It tells me any information I have put in about you."

Now that caught Victor's attention a bit more. "You put facial recognition in it?" He then looked closer and his intrigue quickly fell flat again. Honey had notes written about him in this app, and all of them were quite rude.

"I did, and alongside with people it can recognize objects, plants, pokemon- You could take a photo of a pokemon and it will tell you if you've met this pokemon before. There is a visual implant that we could pair with it as well, and it means you wouldn't even need to physically take a photo. It will automatically record and store what you see with this information and display it for you. So if someone you don't know has approached you and is talking- you can momentarily bring up their information discreetly to your gaze to know their name, and where or when you might have met them!"

Honey had his interest again. He wasn't sure about having implants, they always made him uneasy but that was something he struggled with. "You can't recognize faces well, so this can do it for you!"

"And it's all legal?"

"... Yes."

... Probably wasn't legal but he was tempted by it. 1000 credits was expensive... but it was also something he could afford and he tapped his fingers on the table. "Let me think about it."
