I didn't eat much today. I just drank a glass of water.

C: How did your training go? How long have you been training? (Incl. distance, tempo, and speed)

The training went great. It was a great training. The tempo was really fast today and the tempo for the competition was faster. So, I was able to do the whole race. My pace for this race was 1:39.9. That's really good. For the next race, which I'll be training for, it will be the 10,000 meters. This time I will run 3:00.4, 3.05, or 3.00, maybe 3-1/2. In this time, the pace will also be faster than the one for my first race in Beijing. At this point, with this training, my goal is to be able compete in the Olympics. But I need to improve my time in my last race as well. Then I can go into training in a better position.

Q: What do you think is the most important thing to achieve your goal of being an Olympic champion?

a) I think the key is my training and my preparation. Also, for me, to make a good race is not enough. To make the best race I have to prepare for it and be very consistent. If you have a lot of training or a little training but you're not consistent, you won't be a strong competitor. There is a big difference. A lot can happen in just a few days. You have an advantage if you are consistent and you train well, but if the conditions are not right, then you can't win. Training is important, too. And the last thing is, of course, good luck. Winning is really nice. Of course it's nice to win, that's great, especially for people who have done everything they've been able and have been very close. Because there are people that have had a very hard life, who lost everything, people with disabilities, so it is good to see them win a medal. Even if they are from a poorer country, they get to the Olympic Games and they're happy and that is very nice for them.

I'm not really a big foodie. I don't really know what I eat. But I'm a vegetarian.

(laughs) I was eating a hamburger, and I have a very thick hamburgers. (smiles) the hambowhump. I just put it on there and it looked like the one on TV, but the burger was cooked in the microwave. The burger I had was the regular burger, not the microwaved one. It was very good. My mom said it was good, too. You know, the first time I ate a burger. This is my first burger ever. That was a new one, actually. They were microwaving them. There was one of those hambowshumps, a lot like a patty but it wasn't cooked. And I put my burger on it, then I spread it out and ate it.

How did the audition go?

the scene where I got the job. You have to remember that there was an open spot, that was actually the very first audition I ever got. So, I went in there, they had all the parts. Then there were these two girls there that were auditioning, one was playing the role of my mother, so I did that audition and they were like, "You're going to play her." So I started walking around and talking to them, asking them questions, trying to get a feel for what it's like to be a mother. At that time, my mom was about 80 years old, she was in a nursing home, was basically disabled. She was, like I said, in and out of the hospital for a long time. Just had one arm, really weak, just about to lose her arm. One of her friends had passed away and she had been there for, what, nine years or so. We had a nice house and a pretty nice yard, pretty little house, nice little backyard. Didn't have much money, didn't even have an alarm on the alarm system. Her friends and her family had given her a house to live in. In the movie, you see her walking up to the door, there's a little boy standing there. He's not a kid, he's about six or seven. As soon as he sees her, his eyes light up, because he knows her. When she walks in, this is a scene that takes place in that house. "I got you a present," she says. His eyes go wide. Right away, it looks like she's in trouble, very stressed out. A couple of weeks later, her husband had died, which was just a terrible loss for her and for us. How did it go down? You say that you're a mom, how do you describe your personality? I think a good way to describe it is, as a child I always had an interest in animals and animals in general. Like a dog. People always made fun of me for that. What about a cat? Or a duck? (laughing) Cats, ducks, dogs, all of them were my pets. Always had to have something to do with animals. On the set, did they give you any special training or anything? What did I do? Well, when I first went to audition, people were trying out for the same role, for example, we had this girl who was auditioned for my role. All of a sudden, right when she walked in to see me, (the casting director) was like "Whoa, whoa. Hold it right there! You're not going in." I knew it and was nervous. Now, here I am, sitting there trying my best, doing my line, thinking that maybe they're just going by what they heard. Well. they started to realize I wasn't going. Okay. Do you have any other special skills? My husband was my mechanic. Yes. If I needed something, if I wanted to buy something or something like that, maybe I could get it done. Also, an old friend of mine. Maybe not that old. Oh, probably. Yeah, definitely. Another thing I've got, is I know how to read people. Not how they act, at least in my opinion. Even though I act really cool, sometimes, other people are acting really weird. Sometimes you know they are faking it because they don't smile. Or they just stare at you. Because they know you can see through them and know that they really are, to me atleast, fakers. Some people, especially in Hollywood, are very fake. Especially if you don't know them that well. Anyway, now I can get what you mean. Did you audition for other roles? No, no. Nothing. No. Except for some of these girls. Those two. Why were they

What did your friends eat?

Somewhere between three and five in the afternoon, I went to a restaurant called La Torta. It was a little place with a few tables and a small patio and it was just so nice.

The owner, who was really nice, asked me what I was doing and I said "Oh, doing what?" He said, "You know, playing poker." And I thought, Oh, so I'm playing a game. That was my first time actually playing. I had no idea how to play poker. But the next day I came back and he was like, 'I've got a table for you.'

"I was playing against this guy who had a lot of money in this table. And the guy said to me, you know 'You're playing the best game of poker in Las Vegas.' And that really hit home for me. When you have the opportunity to have a really good game against somebody that has a ton of chips in front of you, it kind of reminds you of the way it is in real life. You realize that you're really only playing for yourself. If you win the game, that's great. So that was definitely a motivating factor. There's a bunch of other reasons as well. A lot people think that playing cards is just a way to relax and play a fun game but it's really a great way for people to bond."

It's the kind that allows people like Jason to develop a connection with others, a bond that can only be formed in a world that is inherently filled with negativity and conflict. Playing poker, while playing it in an environment that makes it easy for players to be a part of a group that benefits from the interaction, creates a sense of community that only comes from a community filled of people who are similarly invested in something. This is something that Jason has experienced in many different ways. He's been a member of many groups, both at school and at home. At school, he's played rugby, basketball, soccer, and even played soccer competitively in college. While Jason is a passionate basketball fan, his passion for poker has always been on the competitive side. As a kid, Jason played pool, but his interest in poker began to rise as he got older. Jason's first poker tournament was the 2011 WSOP in Atlantic City. After a trip to Las Cruces, New Mexico in 2012, where he met fellow poker players, the poker scene in New York City got to Jason. The next year, in 2013, they started playing in local tournaments together. By 2014, when Jason started at NYU, poker was his new passion. Now, almost four years later, as Jason starts his third year at Yale, at a school known for its strong poker community, one can sense that poker is becoming a life-long passion that extends beyond the confines of his dorm room. "It definitely helps that I've been doing this for so long," Jason says. "[I] have an understanding of how poker works. People can come into my room and look at my cards and go, Yeah, those are my hands. They're not looking at the board. All of that stuff is actually irrelevant. What they're looking for is the connection. How do I know this person? How can I get to know them? I don't have to rely on a physical connection at all." The connection is there. In fact, many poker rooms at universities have become so well known that students who don't know the rooms have no problem finding them. One night, after Jason and his friends had played a couple of games of Super Smash Bros., a Smash Brothers game that many people in his area have never heard of, someone walked into the room who recognized Jason from his school days. For the first couple weeks, this stranger was Jason's only friend. Through the years, these kind interactions have helped Jason learn what it means to interact in new environments. To play with people he doesn't know and interact with them in ways that are not just about winning. Poker allows Jason a level of freedom that other games, like basketball or soccer can't provide. His friends are there to watch him play, to see him win, even if they don't get a chance to sit next to him at every tournament. On top of all that, there's no pressure at poker tournaments. No one is trying to get you to lose. Instead, everyone is here for the same thing: to win.

I had some fried rice, a piece of pizza, and a bunch of fruit.

What's the last movie you saw?

of course the new one!

and yes, I went to the theater again today. I had a great time, my wife and I enjoyed the movie and it was great to see my friends and family.

Do you have any hobbies? What are they? Have you been to any conventions? Any good movies you've watched recently? If so, what were they like? Anything you'd like to share with us? You should also mention a hobby you think I should try? I'm pretty sure you do not need to mention anything you're not interested in. Just tell us what you like, why you enjoy it, etc. Anything else that is really important? It's ok to just tell me what interests you. If it's something you know a lot about or you are interested, that's great too. What do you want to do with your life? Maybe we can find a way to help you with that. Maybe you can talk to me about it. There's no obligation to talk about anything or anything, but I do want you to be interested and want me to tell you what I think about what we're doing. That's all I ask. It doesn't have to take longer than 20 seconds.

I ate a burger.

of course, you know I'm a vegetarian.

Well, I can understand that. But I'll tell you what. You know what? I just ate an egg. A hard-boiled one. And I ate it with a little bit of mustard on it. That's it!

...and you said you're a vegan. Well, we'll see about that, because I think I'd like to go vegan, too. I am a veggie. It's just, it's not something that I really think about very often. (laughs)

the egg is a kind of a symbol of the earth, and the fact that it was hard boiled is an indication of how much time and effort it takes to do that kind food. So, there's a lot of symbolism in there, which is fine with me. Actually, a couple of my friends have asked me if I would eat a hamburger and some eggs, so I guess that's how I've been feeling lately.

I had a little bit of lunch. I had some chicken, some fish, and some vegetables.

is this the first time you've gone to the doctor for something like this? Did you have a prior history of these types of issues? What were your symptoms?

No, I've never had any of those.

the symptoms, they are very similar to what the doctors had seen before. My symptoms are like the typical things you would see with these type of headaches. You know, the headache is intense, it's short, but it goes away very quickly. The nausea is not as severe as it was, that's for sure. They also noticed that I was losing a lot of weight. So I know that that is probably from my lack of sleep. Also, a few days ago I took a blood test and I just got the results back, so I'm not sure what happened. But they said that my blood sugar was extremely high. That is something that a doctor said I should keep an eye on. What did they test for? They tested for diabetes, hypertension, cholesterol, triglycerides, LDL and HDL. There's a couple of different blood tests that they do. And I got a total cholesterol of 210, which is very high, even though I am not diabetic. If I were, this would be a good test to have. For the triglyceride, there was a very low reading of only 14, where most people have that reading above 20. It just doesn't make sense to me. LDL, HDL, total, all of that, is a marker for heart disease. This is the highest reading that this cholesterol level has ever been. When I read the tests, one of my goals is to get my cholesterol below 300. Is this something you can do? I can't do anything about it. Can you tell me what you're doing to manage this situation? Yeah, sure, yeah, you know. Right now I have some medication that helps a bit with the nausea, with my stomach, my diarrhea. Basically, just to make sure that the things that are going on, like my headache, don't get any worse. Will this be something I need to continue to take? Yes, obviously, because I don't -you know I think that most of the medications that you take help with some of your symptom. At least the side effects that we have, we can manage them. Our goal is, as far as the medication goes, to keep it at a level that will not cause any side effect. How long do you think this will take to fully recover? It's gonna take a long time. Actually, no, actually, not at all. We're going to see how it heals. With the amount of time that it takes to heal, for me it will be probably a year. In the meantime, what is your plan? If the headaches don't go away, if I stay in this condition, how do I deal with it? How do people deal? Well, first and foremost, stay away from it if you feel that way. Second, try to relax. Try to not think about the pain, especially if it is severe. Then, get up, take some time out of work. Take a nap, go for a walk. Have a glass of wine or a beer. Go to a movie, or go to an amusement park, something relaxing. Just stay relaxed and try not to think too much about what's going through your head. Do you see any relief in your life now? Absolutely, absolutely. Not only with this headache. Having this kind of headache that has affected me for so long, everything has changed. Before, when I would get this severe headache or migraine, sometimes it would last for days, weeks, months. Now, having this one, almost overnight, was like, "Wow, wow, woe is me." I mean, now, seeing the improvement that everything is getting, definitely, in my life, also helps with not having a headache at night. To me, without a doubt, getting relief, every day, at least, helps. Any advice for other people who are having these kinds of symptoms or headaches? There is no cure for this. No, of course not. All that someone can really do is be aware of their symptoms and take care of them and make the best of it, whatever they can. As far that goes.

I just had some chicken.

The second thing I wanted to say was that I think it's important to take time to be with your family. You can't just go to work and leave your kids at home and do your job. We've talked about it, and I know I'm not the only one who does that. So I was hoping you could say something to that effect. I want to do the right thing and try to help the team. And I don't want my kids to think that it will be like this forever, or that they'll never be able to have a normal life. The way I look at it is, the way that my mom looked at life was normal. She was the kind of person who would go out and work when she was sick and take care of her family and get up at 5 o'clock every day and go work. That's what she did. My mom is the same way. Her kids are the exact same, except I have four kids and she has three. It just doesn't make sense to me. There's so much more to life than football. But I do know that, for me, it would be a huge disappointment to my family if I had to sit out there and be the guy who doesn't, not only sit there, but not be out on the field with my teammates. Hopefully, we can find a way to make it work, because we both love it here. If I can make the roster and help this team win and have an opportunity to play, I'll do it. For me to go back to school and play football again, that's the goal. Not just to try and make a living off of football, which I wouldn't be doing if it wasn't for this opportunity. Whatever the outcome is with this, if that happens, then I will have accomplished my goal of having a family, of being a man, living a good life, enjoying myself, whatever.

I had a fish and chips, a burger and a small salad.

, I had to eat my dinner in my bed because I was so tired. I don't know how I managed to do that. It was a great night. The next day I went to the beach and had lunch. A friend had invited me to go to his house for lunch, and he invited the whole family. So I came along with my friend. We went there and it was an amazing experience. This was the first time I'd been to a house where there was no TV, no radio, nothing, just the sound of the waves. That was incredible. Then we went for a walk around the area, but that was it.

What's your favourite thing to cook?

"I'm a vegetarian so I tend to make my meals vegetarian, so my favourite meal is a salad."

of course, the salmon and the avocado, that's my absolute favourite. But I'm also a big fan of chicken, or fish, depending on the season. Anything that comes out of a can, like a chicken nugget, is great. And I like to keep things simple. Like my salad, it's just a few ingredients, some mayonnaise, lettuce, cucumbers and tomatoes. To me that should be it, you know? I enjoy simple cooking. My mum is really good at it too, because she's always been a very simple cook. She'll cook just one thing. You know, my mum makes a really nice chicken dish, she'll make a nice salmon dish. There's no fancy stuff. All her food is like that, simple and delicious. I've never had any problems with food in the past. In fact, when I first came to Australia I couldn't stand the food. When I moved to London my mother cooked for me, which was really great, especially when she cooked a whole chicken. Now I've come to Melbourne and I love the dining scene, there's so much food to choose from, from the fish restaurants to some great Thai restaurants. My favourite restaurant is Sushi Masa, in Melbourne, they have really interesting and really fresh sushi. Also they serve a lot of good Japanese food, good ramen, sushi, lots of things. They have a ton of vegan options too. Also, if I want to have something fancy I go for one of those gourmet burger places. There's this amazing burger shop in Sydney called The Burger Project. Their burgers are amazing, huge portions, all the ingredients are organic, really delicious and they're all vegetarian. Then there are these little places like Blue Bottle in Adelaide, where they've got these really cool and cool little vegan spots. So I just try and make sure I eat healthy, to try to stay away from any kind of processed food and to get some fruits and vegetables.

A few examples of how to write your values statement include:

Happiness: "I want to be happy"

Boredom: ""I have a lot of things to do and I am bored. I want a change of pace" Happiness is not always easy to find but can be achieved by having positive thoughts and doing things that make you happy. If we do this, we will be much happier than we would be if we did not take the time to think about our values. Our values will help us achieve happiness. Happiness and self-worth are important and should not be neglected. You should focus on them and try to achieve them. When we focus our efforts on achieving happiness, it is much easier for us to enjoy ourselves. We will not feel as if life is a burden to us. There is no need to feel guilty or ashamed when we make mistakes. Instead, they will just help to improve our skill. Making mistakes will also help in our search for happiness and success. "If you get something right, you will get everything else right" Self-esteem: I'm a good person. My goals are realistic. People who are nice to me are trustworthy. As a result, I feel confident. Your goal is to make people like you, so focus only on yourself. That is the only thing you need. Setting `pad_token_id` to `eos_token_id`:50256 for open-end generation.

I was in the office eating, and I was eating two tacos, two chicken sandwiches, a couple of chips, some salsa, an apple, something else. I had some coffee.

the first time I came to the restaurant we had a little table outside and we just sat there and drank our coffee and ate our food. Then we went inside and sat down. The waitress came over and said, "Can I get you some of that hot sauce, please?" I said yes. She put the hot sauces on the table. It was a whole bottle of hot peppers. We were all sitting there eating our lunch. And the server came up and asked if we'd like some hot chicken. All of us said no. "Well, I think you guys are all going to like this. If you don't want to eat it, you can just have it without the chicken." ... The next thing I know, he brought us the entire bottle. He brought it to our table, poured the whole thing in our glasses, put it in front of all of our faces, started with the peppers, went right to everything else, took a sip, then just went back to it. So he took the bottle and he poured it all over our plates. Just for us to see it and see the sauce.

What was the most expensive thing you ordered?

for lunch I ordered a chicken burrito. There were six of them. One with lettuce and tomato, one with cheese, another with sour cream, the third one was salsa. That was $10. For lunch, they didn't charge me for the burritos. They charged me $3 for everything. At the end, when I got home, it was like $5.00. When they gave it back, that's the amount that was on my bill. But I still had the money. In my whole life, nobody's ever asked me how much I paid for that burrio. No one's asked how many burris I bought. Nobody's asking how long it took me to pay for it or how I feel about it now that I'm back in Mexico. (laughs)

the other thing that happened was that when we were waiting for our order, we started talking about the food and where we thought the best place to get it would be. Suddenly, this guy walks by. A little Hispanic guy. Some kids were playing with him. After a minute, everyone in line starts looking at him, looking him up. Everybody in my line did. His name was "Pedro" (laughter). I didn't know who he was. Of course, everybody knew who Pedro was because he had been working at the place for like four years. Pedro, in his own words, was one of the main people that worked there. Now, what was strange was, Pedro had an accent. You could tell he wasn't really from Mexico, because I could see he spoke a lot of English. People in other countries were not able to tell that he didn't really speak Spanish, but he did speak English with an American accent, which I couldn't understand. What I did understand, though, is that it wasn't a very hard accent to understand because it didn't sound very American. Like, there was no vowels. Not a single vowel. Nothing. This was very different from what I'd heard my parents say. My parents were Mexican. Or, if I wasn't speaking Spanish or something, my grandparents were speaking English, or my aunts were talking Spanish. Everything was different. Even my name, all my family's names were different, like, from the state where they came from. Because they were from different parts of Mexico and they weren't all from a different part of their state. Except for Pedro. Every one, except for him was from Jalisco, Mexico. I just couldn't have ever seen him before. Before, people would talk about him and say he came out of a tiny town. Most people didn't know anything about Jalapa, Jalisco. Jalapa, to them, just sounded like a name. Back in Jalisco, where I grew up, no one knew Pedro's name at all. As for my mom, she was afraid of Pedro because she knew he worked at that place. Her idea was he would steal everything from her and stuff like that. Well, every time she went to that restaurant, after she ordered something and she came back and paid, her eyes would get big, big. Really big because of his accent and everything he said. Any time you went in there, his eyes were always big and his mouth was always open, kind of like he wanted to say something but couldn't. Sometimes he'd be looking over at people and pointing to where something was for them to put on their plate. Those eyes of course it's kiki, but still!

It's so refreshing to see a person who doesn't have their life completely controlled by other people and the irony is that she's always been very vulnerable and open about her life and her relationships and she has been so transparent about this.

the thing is, people don't like it when they're vulnerable, especially if it makes them look bad. of all the people on here who have been in relationships, I think she is the only one who has even admitted that. I'm not saying she needs to do it again, just that people need to realize that it was only a few years ago that they were in a relationship with someone they weren't happy with. It's not like she hasn't had other partners (aside from kota), but she never talked about them. people always talk about other things. she knows she was being manipulative, she just doesn't like being called out on it. it hurts her, it doesn't

A lot of people seem to think that we're all "willing" to sleep with anyone who comes along. There are plenty of other women who are willing to have sex with men who don't. They are just the exception. Not all of us are that open to it, and when we are, we aren't going to admit it to our friends or our families. Kiki is a rare case where she really is open. She's had plenty, plenty and plenty. That's why it is so hard for me to believe that her parents would let her live out her own life as she sees fit. What about the other ones who aren't.H.I.N.G?

of. the. point. kik. is. not. open. to. me. about. my. life. and. what. does. that. mean.?

for. every. single. one. who. has. been. there. i. will. be. with. them. and i. will. never. give. up. because. i'm...

(I will be with them, because I love them and because they are my friends and I am not going anywhere.)

I think Kota is really struggling to figure out what to say about all this stuff, as it comes from the same place that so many of her fans are. In Kaka's eyes, her ex-boyfriend is her best friend, so there is no way she can ever love him back, or he her. The only thing that could make her break up with him is if he said that he loved her and they had feelings for each other again. But that would mean that Kik was on the outs, right? It would also mean she could never be close to him again because of that, which is why she doesn;t want to talk to Kekota anymore. And if she did, that wouldn;t be good for her career. Even if KK and Kiko were still friends, KIK would still be a "loose" girl, like KT and everyone else. If KAKA got back together with KTT, then her relationship status would change. Just like how K-K-Q-S would stop being a big deal if they dated again (which they never did).

was. just. so. hard. to. explain. how. this all. happened. for every single person on this site, you have someone who feels like they can't open up about their relationship because it would be seen as a betrayal to their friends. This is not Kika's fault. We all have our own reasons for why we stay in our relationships. Some people are afraid of being alone and afraid to be vulnerable. Others are scared of getting hurt and don;t care about being hurt. Those are all valid reasons, though. People who say that you can never open your relationship up because you'll just ruin your career are full of shit. You can do whatever you want, not just because its "the right thing to," but because YOU want it too. Don't be afraid. Have your cake and eat it as well. Being open is completely fine and normal. Its not a bad thing. Why are people so afraid? because people think they have to keep it all a secret because their relationships are "too important."

I'm so glad that some of you are finally starting to open things up. Thank you for helping me get through it like I did. ^^ I don'T have anyone to go to for

I ate some banana, some mango, and some pineapple. I ate them at my desk. of course, I also drank a cup of coffee. My brain was in an "off" state, but it's still not that bad. After the first cup, my thoughts went back to work. So I did some paperwork. This is what I was doing. First, there was some information about my current company, which I can't disclose because I don't want to disclose any confidential information. Then I read the contract that is attached. The contract said that if I ever get fired, the company will give me 2.5 million dollars. That's the amount that I am going to get. What do I do with 2 million? I think that this is a big mistake. But if they are going out of business, then I have to do something with that money. Therefore, because of my interest in the business and my desire to have some money, you will see that there is some kind of an agreement between us. In fact, we have already signed the agreement. Of course I had the same attitude as you. We didn't even think about the future. It's not like we wanted to spend our life in a luxury apartment. If you were to ask me if there were any particular reason why I decided to take up this job, it would be because the salary was so much that you couldn't turn it down. You don't think anything about it. Well, that's right. There was no particular situation. Because of the kind nature of our company and our salary, our whole company is going into bankruptcy. As for the money that we are getting, all of it is for my salary. And because it was a year of vacation, they gave me three months of salary for that year. (laughing) What are you going back on? We are talking about a normal salary that can be used to buy a car. Also, when I get my vacation pay, what will I buy for myself? A new car? There are a lot of things that are hard to use money for. For example, as a human being, how can I use a million yen for something that has no use? In this business world, if you have money and are thinking about things like that, one day you might die. Even if it happens today, tomorrow it could happen again. Just because you are rich doesn't mean that life will be easy. However, a billion yen is still a hundred million, right? It is the biggest amount of money I've ever seen. When I asked for it, this person (the person who gave it to me) was very happy to give it back. To think I would get this kind salary and be able to live with it! It was like a dream. "If I really get out, can you give my number to my parents?" I thought that it wasn't impossible. Although I'm still in high school, in my mind, since I started working, everything is already the best in life. No one can touch me. Everything is good. Only I wanted that salary more than anything else. At that moment, he came back from the bathroom. He is one of those people who comes back and sits down on the chair next to his chair and says, "I'm about to go to the restroom." "What are we going on about?" "Nothing." I didn

The bathroom, huh? To go out to eat, go for a walk, or go back home after work... What kind of a person do you think you're becoming? "So, who is that guy?" When he saw me, his face became all red. His eyes were red and his lips were trembling. A man who has been in this company for ten years. Was it because he was embarrassed? Because he wanted me to leave? Or... "Hey, wait a minute. Aren't you a little bit older than me?" No matter what, on that day, everyone was staring at me as if their lives depended on it... It could be said as the highest compliment to receive a high salary when you've been working for such a long time. Looking back, is it really so surprising that they all had an expression of admiration? When you go through a tough time, people will always be like, 'He's our boss.' If it were me at the time I couldn't understand what they were saying. Did they really think of me like this? Well then, let's go. Let's have lunch. Since he is very important to us, why don't we let him take a break first? (laughs)

"So what do we do now?"

After lunch, after he got off work, about 10 minutes after the office closed, someone suddenly came to our office. They were a man and a [Trying to hold back the tears] I'm going to miss you so much.

The following morning, the couple drove to St. Louis. They stayed at the Radisson Hotel, where they met a group of friends, including several of the people who had seen their car, and the group had a barbecue. The couple talked about their plans for the next few days. "We were having a great time," she says. She had planned to go to a concert at a club in St Louis, but the family was exhausted. So they decided to spend the night at their apartment. When the sun rose, they were still in bed. After some time, she got up to use the bathroom. Her boyfriend was in the room next to hers. As she passed him, he told her, "I'm just going through the motions, you know, trying to keep up with the Joneses." "So you're just sitting here, pretending to be asleep?" she asked. He replied, "I know. That's what it's like to have children. But I am so happy. And I've got so many people to thank for this. Thank you for everything."

It was a small gesture, a reminder of how deeply they had loved each other, how happy they would be together again, that he was not lying. Their love was real. In the morning she took a shower, got dressed and went to work. At 8:30 a.m., her boyfriend left for work as well. A few hours later, at 2 p. m., she went back to her apartment and found the door to the bedroom unlocked. One of her cats, an older black tabby, was standing in her doorway. Inside she found his dead body on the bed, still wearing his underwear.

What do you do for fun? What do your friends do? How do they do it? Who are you trying to impress? Do you know what you want to do with your life? Are you happy with who you are? Does it make you sad to think about where you came from? Why do people think that you're so different from them? Where do things go wrong in your mind? Is there something you need to overcome in order to be happy? (This will give you a lot of ideas to try on for size.)

The questions above are a good starting point, but you can go deeper. What does it mean to you to eat food that has been treated with care? To be cared for? Can you imagine eating food for a living? It's really up to each of you, and you have to decide what it means to YOU. In a way, it's a kind of personal therapy. Just be honest and be open about it. There will be a time to talk about your thoughts and feelings about food, as well as the food itself. But, don't force it! Keep the conversation as relaxed as possible and as nonjudgmental as you possibly can. You don't have the right to choose. Don't let a big "no" change the course of your relationship. It is okay to say "I'm sorry, I can't do this" and "No, this is not right for me" (if you don't feel you've made the correct decision), but just be clear about what your reasons are.

Do you have a favorite song or album that you've been listening to lately?

, you'll be able to see, but, the question itself isn't something I can answer. I've gotten used to the new songs, so it's not like I listen to it all the time. I've tried listening through some of the old songs that I used as reference, because I thought it would be a good chance to learn how to sing. But I couldn't get the hang of it. (laugh) So that's why I'm not really sure how the song sounds like, or how it sounds when I sing it... It's really hard to know how I sound like when singing it, at all. So that song is something that has been on my mind. It's a song that is very important to me. It was the one song I was able, through hard work, to finish and put out. And it has a lot of meaning to my family, and it will be remembered as a special song. When I finished singing, I cried. My father was a singer, a band leader, an idol, too. Even so, he didn't have much money. He couldn't do the same thing as me, in that he was poor, as well. He had his own house, where he lived with his family. The only things he had were a guitar, his clothes, maybe some food. But he could still sing, of that there's no doubt. If he wasn't in a difficult situation, then he would have been able to sing for everyone. That's something he wanted for his daughter. So I think that was what I learned from him. Even before he died, my father had a dream. To become an artist, like my mother. To do something for the people he loved, that would make his dream come true. A dream that my dad never had. That dream was his way of thinking, no matter what. A dream is not just something you want to have. You have to work for it to come to fruition. My dad was always working hard for that dream, even if it was only for a short while. Because of his hard efforts, it came true in the end. And he also had the strength to be strong. For the sake of making the dream a reality, for my sake, when he went away, all of my emotions went out with him, including my sadness. Of course, there was sadness, especially when my parents' house was being demolished. Those were hard times, although they were very brief. Then I became a child. The time that passed after my mom died was very peaceful. There were times when we'd go out and play, go to eat, eat together. We'd have fun. When I heard the news that they'd been torn down, this feeling of sadness came to mind, with my tears. Now I realize that in order for people to say my name, they have had to hear my story. Just how much has it taken to make people believe in my existence? The first time I saw a poster of me was in elementary school. At that time, people were saying that the poster was cute. They were calling it cute, cute! (laughs) But, what are people saying about me? They're saying, "A cute kid with glasses." They say that it looks like me! What's so cute about that? I don't know what they're thinking. What's cute is the person, who's the only one who can be loved by the entire world. Cute, huh? It must be cute for you, if you think about it like that. Is there something cute? I'm just a normal, ordinary boy. As a human, how can I be anything else? The people who see me must think, Is he a cute guy or a cuddly girl? Cuddlesome. Is that what you're trying to express? It would appear so. At any rate, since I started to live in this world, things that are cute to you are different from the things I like. Cute to someone who has never met me is different than cute me by myself. In other words, everyone's perception of what is cute will always be different. You can't always just have the opinion of others, after all... It is hard, isn't it? But, please don't get confused. Do not get angry at others. Get angry only at yourself. Don't make others' lives difficult. Do not make my life difficult, either. If you do not have any strength, try to become strong, don't just make yourself stronger. Be strong for yourself, make sure that your strength is always there. Never give up. Keep trying, keep working, just don't give in to despair.

Setting `pad_token_id` to `eos_token_id`:50256 for open-end generation.

How much did the food cost? What did your house look like? Did you hear any music today?"

A lot of questions have to be answered for a child to develop a sense of self. These questions help you establish the child's sense that she or he is a unique individual, one who has unique needs.

for example, "What do you like to do? Where do people gather? Do you do anything unusual?" Your child will have a more complete sense if you ask the following questions:

... What do they look for in a friend?

"Where do your friends go? Who do most of your school friends hang out with?" Ask questions that will help the children develop their sense for self and identity.

The other part of this exercise is to ask your child what he or she likes about the people around them. If you can get the kids to talk about their friends and their activities, you will be able to help them develop good social skills. You can start this by asking the question, What is your friend's favorite color? You may want to use a picture to give the answer. The kids should be allowed to show you their favorite colors. Then ask them, How do the colors of the other kids in your class look to you? They should get excited about this question. They are being asked to identify something about themselves that they are not able or willing to say. This is the kind of question that allows your children to feel they have something to share with you and others. Once the color question is answered, ask a similar question about what they like about other people. Try this: "You like people with different colors and styles of clothing. What does that mean to your mom?" It is important to notice how the kid responds. It should not be a negative response. A positive response will bring the conversation to a different level.

I had a salad with tuna salad.

The tuna was fresh, the salad was good. It was very tasty. The lettuce was crispy and the tuna didn't have much fish. I like the taste of tuna. If I'm going to eat tuna, I would rather eat it with some tuna than fish sticks. This time, my family ate it together. They are all Japanese. When we were in school, we used to make sushi together, so we have the same taste. We didn't of course eat the salmon, but I don't like salmon. There was some salmon in the fish stick, though. Even though I didn't like it, it was fine. But it wasn't really delicious. In the end, there was no problem. As a matter of fact, when I was thinking about it I thought, "If I eat this, no one will eat my fish." So, if it's the time for dinner, then I should go to the restaurant. So I ate this sushi. Then I went to see the movie. At the theater, they have a small food court. One of the food stands was called "Sushi Sushi." I wanted to buy a sushi stick. My father said, Don't go there. That's a bad place to go. You should just eat at home. Why do you want to purchase sushi? I asked him. He said it would be good if I bought it. Since I had some time until my next meal, let's buy it and eat there when we go home from the store. Let's go for it! I said. Actually, at that time I did not know it's sushi was so delicious, and I even wanted some. And at the last moment, because I couldn't afford it at my house, for the sake of my father's feelings I purchased it from a big supermarket. Now I know that I can eat sushi anywhere, as long as I have some money.

If you want to search for the first occurrence of the character in a string, then use. - is used to separate the characters. For example, if you wanted to find all the instances of "M" in "Hello", you would use:. " Hello \m"

1.4.1 The -match-str function

In most cases, the function -name is enough to determine what a particular character means. However, some situations are more complicated than others. In particular, it is often useful to know what the string is matched against. Here are some examples of such situations: If a file name contains a ' . ', the file is named. So the command. /foo/bar matches any file with the extension. or foo, and any other file that ends in bar. (The only special case is. and foo.) If there is an empty line before the /, the empty file should be treated as if it were a directory.

Therefore, ./foo should match /. In this case, / foo is treated the same way as / (i.e. a match for foo). If an argument is given, a single character is taken as a pattern for that argument. (See also -first-match, -last-pattern, etc.)

The -pattern function is similar to -string, except that the pattern can be a regular expression. The only difference between the two is that -regex is generally more powerful. See -char-set, for more information. -expression is like - regex, but it treats all arguments as regular expressions. You can't use it with - pattern or - string, because - expression doesn't work with any arguments. So, for example: ./configure -config -exec./run -no-config./bar -run (The '-in -program is not necessary because the '--'is optional.) You may wish to combine the functions - name,, or pattern into one command, so that you don't have to type out the names of all three. To do this, enclose the three commands in parentheses. Example: (./config-file) --name foo -command./test-command -type f -test

See the description of -line for an example of using this form. When you use this facility, your shell will automatically perform the following translation: -substitute /path/to/file/name

There are several functions that take a parameter of type string. These functions work exactly the way you might expect them to: they take the parameters and convert them into a value of that type. They are: strconv, strcat, mkstr, sprintf, substr, ungetc, getc and getchar. Some of these functions can accept more parameters. Examples: The strconv function converts a number to a shell string: $ echo 12345678 | strConv 123456 $ strcmp $strConvert 123 -strconv 123 $ printf "%s"

" $ substr $printf "%-8s" -printf $ unGetc $ getch $getchar

You can convert a variable to an array: echo $(strlen $a) | substr -s $((strlen $b) - 1) $ ls -la ${a[0]} ${b[1]} - $1) See the section on the array expansion functions for some more examples. strncat converts an integer number of characters to the number specified by its argument: printf "%d"

the %s", $n, $s; $0 = $3 + $4; printf "${3+$4} and $5
of $6

\tr

", "$n", "", $s, "

strlen converts the length of an object to its value. Strlen is useful for determining how much data is contained in an item, such as in lists. It is equivalent to strlen($_). You must use strlcpy to copy the data in, as the strcat function will not copy. $ cat test.txt | test -n1 strln $cat test-txt test $ for x in 1 2 3 4 5 6; do strnl $x; done test

Strnchar converts its first argument to ASCII

Pretzels: Just the usual.

in the morning, my parents had a big breakfast for me. I think they were trying to get me to eat better. But I had all my favorites, like a chicken sandwich and a chocolate milkshake. The milkshake tasted like I was drinking milk! It was a good breakfast. In the afternoon, I would have my lunch, which was normally a bag of Doritos. At first, it was just a little bag. Then they started putting it in a bowl. And then they put it into a sandwich. That was the lunch I ate most of the time. After that, they'd go through a few bowls of food, and then it would go into the wrap, then into another wrap. They'd put the wraps into these little bags that were meant to hold a bunch of things. By the end of lunchtime, all that was left in the bag was Dorito wrappers. My parents loved me for my love of everything Doritan Cheeto, so they made sure I got a lot of that.
Sometimes, when I wanted something more, there was no way I could get it, because they had to go to the store. All they could do was put a package of Cheetos into my bag, but they didn't have to do that with every single thing they gave me, though. Like when my mom would make me a snack, she'd get a piece of chocolate covered pretzel, maybe a couple of chips, some grapes, or a bit of cheese. She'd wrap it all up in plastic, put some of those in my little plastic baggy, stick it right in there, wrap that up, go get some food for the kids, get the groceries, buy more Cheetsos, pack the bags, take them out of my house, shove them all back in, open the door, close the lock, throw the whole thing in one bag and carry it out to my car, drive off and go home. It would be like, "Hey, what do you want to watch?" and I'd say, whatever I have on my iPad, the new ones, anything. Usually, nothing. We were watching "The Walking Dead" in bed. There's a scene where Rick is going down the hall and he has to open a door. He opens the wrong door and they shoot him. Now I'm all, wow, that's really cool. So I pull out my phone, look at the video, make a face, stuff, eat my Cheeta. Mom would say something like: "So, how did that go?" And I just say: just fine, thank you. As a kid, you have these really specific ideas of what you should eat and what not to. You're really into it. When you're a child, everything is a treat. What's your favorite candy? Mine was Dolly Parton's. For me it wasn't really about the taste. If I loved it and it tasted good, why not? But for most kids who are like me—who like to be able to have a variety of foods—I was like "I don't want anything sweet." I never wanted to drink soda. Even if I knew there were three other kids in our house who drank soda, if it's out there and you can get soda for free, shouldn't you get something else? I didn't.

You have this really intense interest in anything and everything. Who were your role models growing up? Like, your dad? My dad was really just the same person. His interests were just like mine. Our interests in things were the exact same. One time I remember I asked him, do I want candy, a cookie, something to read, to listen to music, as a way to let him know I liked to talk about stuff. To get him to remember that I like things, even if they're not his. How do your parents feel about your lifestyle now? They're fine with it! They love me! I get to see them a half-hour before I leave for work, before they pick me up. Whenever I go over to visit, we sit down and talk. Before I went to college, every visit we had, one of us would just watch TV and have ice cream or something, while the other one would stay and watch the news. On my first day of college I told my dad I wouldn't be going home for Christmas. Just because I don't like the idea of being able to see my family, not just for a day, on a regular basis. Why is it that you go for so much joy every time you leave home? Well, this year, for some reason, right before my birthday, Thanksgiving, Christmas, New Year's Day, things like that are the happiest times of our lives.

What was your favorite breakfast? What did your kids eat? How did they eat it? Did they like it too? Do you have any tips for them? You can also share a recipe for your own kid's breakfast.

(I used to go to a restaurant that was called "Coney Island" but they changed the name to "Taste of New York" because it was a little too good to be true. It was really just a bunch of cheap fried chicken. I was pretty sure I would never eat that again.)

I'll admit it. The first time I made this I didn't have fresh broccoli so I used frozen broccoli florets. But now that I've made it twice I think I prefer fresh. My kids love it and it's so much healthier than the frozen stuff. Plus, it doesn't take a lot of time to make. This is a great way to use up all those frozen veggies you may have lying around. And this is also great for a quick weeknight meal. A couple of days ago I had a big batch of broccoli that needed to cook so it went in the slow cooker. Then I put this in there for about 4 hours and my husband said it looked like "a big bowl of soup." He was right. So this makes a good week night dinner. You could also freeze the broccoli and then just throw it into the crock pot and heat it up in about an hour. Yum!

What do you mean? What do I eat? I've never eaten anything before. I never eat anything!

The man was surprised, and looked at the girl, who was looking down at her plate.

"You look like you've been through a lot. And your face looks like it's been beaten up by some sort of wild animal. You're not eating, are you?"

Crap. He was right. She was eating. "No."

It was just the same as always. The man smiled, but it was more of a sad smile. Then he looked up. It was a very big smile, very sad. His lips were pulled back in a smile of his own. Her eyes widened. Suddenly, she felt as if she was being watched. This was too much. A chill went down her spine. Was he watching her? Was she being followed? She turned and bolted for the door. There was nowhere to run. How long could he watch her like this? He'd just watched her eat and now he was watching the way she moved. Did she have any weapons? Did he have weapons with him? Had he already taken one? This could be dangerous. Or was she just a prey? Something was wrong. What was he doing here? How did he know that she had eaten? It didn't make any sense. Could he see through her eyes? And why did she look so vulnerable? Why did it look as though she were going to cry? All of these questions raced through the woman's mind. Why didn't she run? The thought of being chased was terrifying. But if he could see her, why couldn't he follow her and hurt her in some way? "I told you! You can't eat!" The woman screamed. Screamed at what? At the man? But the words died in her throat. All she could do was stare at him. Looking at his face. If only she knew what he saw, if only he knew that he had done this to her. So many things went through that woman's mind, so many fears and worries. Now all that remained was to get out of there.

A lot of Chinese food.

- How much do you weigh? - I'm not sure. I think I weigh about 120 kilos. What's your favorite meal? My favorite is the Chinese dumpling. They have the best dUMPLINGS in the world. The Chinese are very particular about the food they eat. So you can't just order whatever you want. You have to say what you're eating. When I go to China, I have a lot more freedom. But I don't go out of my way to eat Chinese. For example, when I was in China I didn't eat pork. Because I got sick. And I had to go back and say, "I want to have pork." So I came home and said, 'I'm going to make pork for you.' I put pork in it and it worked. It was great. Who is your personal hero? I can only say that I like the American hero, the Superman. That's my hero. Superman's a super hero for me. My wife and I are both fans of Superman, and we're fans for life. We've just decided to keep that going.

If you were to give a speech about how you lived your life, what would you say? What would your best life advice be? I'd say that you shouldn't be scared to make mistakes. The biggest mistake I made in my life was when i decided to quit my job. I had been working there for almost 5 years, and it was my dream job, but i didn't want to do it anymore. it wasn't the best place to be, it didn't suit me, i had a lot of problems at work, which i'm sure you can guess. But still i wanted to leave. And i did. So i said to myself: "I don't care about the money, I don. t care if i have to work for free, if the company is going to try to get me to stay, that's fine, because i'll just go somewhere else. "But i also thought: I'm not going anywhere, this is my home, my family. If they think i am not worth anything anymore, then i will go home." And that is why i left. That is how i came to my decision. Now, you know, sometimes you have no choice. Sometimes you just have too much to lose. Well, luckily, life is more often than not about losing. It's just that sometimes, instead of losing, we learn from our mistakes and move on. You can't change the past, the only thing you change is your attitude towards it. A lot can change in a year. We all have different ways of doing things, different personalities, etc. etc, just like everyone else in this world. Life is a journey, not a destination. Everything happens for a reason. Take the time to learn and grow, don;t be afraid of the things that make you uncomfortable. Always be learning. Don't waste your time. Enjoy your journey. For me the biggest advice i'd give is to always be trying to improve yourself. When you feel like you are not good enough, stop and take a step back. Go back and review all of your past experiences. Figure out what is really good and what you should be doing differently. In my experience, there is no one way to have a good life. Everyone has a different way of going about it, some people are more organized, others are messy, or more fun, people have their own strengths and weaknesses. Each of us has different traits, strengths, weaknesses, personality, habits, everything. Try to understand who you really are and be able to use those qualities to your advantage. Make a list of all the people in your immediate life and see if they are really making you happy. Are you in relationships? If so, how are they working out? Do you like having a family? Is your family happy? Are they happy with you? Don; t be too attached to the person you love. Maybe you don t even like that person, maybe you'd be happier if you didn; it's ok to change. People change, things change all, even things in our lives. Things are always changing, always evolving. There's nothing that can be fixed, nothing you do can stop the process. Just be open to it and understand that life will take it as it comes. Find your passion, find your purpose, whatever it may be. Remember that there are no right or wrong answers. All that matters is what works for you. Good luck, have fun and don;"t forget to breathe.

"You can't eat all the time." (laughs)

- What do you do when you have the day off? Do you go to the gym? What are you doing? - The day before today, I went to a club to listen to music. I was watching TV and I saw a news about a new program that was on.

I looked at my watch and it was 10:30 in the morning. Then I thought I need to sleep. So I decided to go home. When I got home I changed into my clothes. In the living room there was a bunch of people watching the news. It was just me and a few people. And then, suddenly, the TV went off. The news was about the explosion in New York. A lot of the people in my room were crying. Everyone was crying because of what happened in Manhattan. My parents were in shock. They didn't know what to do. At that time, my mom was working. She was also crying, but I didn't understand what was going on, what had happened. We had nothing to lose. All we wanted was to get out of here. That was the reason we were going to New Jersey. But I don't think I can live in a place like that. You can never go back there. - When you were getting ready to leave, were you feeling any kind of pressure? I felt a little bit of stress. Because, of course, when the world's going crazy, you don't know how to react. No matter how you feel, something always happens. There is always a crisis. People say they don't have anything to worry about. Well, if it is something that you can control, then it isn't really a problem. Anyway, it's a fact that things are changing. What can you control? You are not going back. After the bomb, there were so many people who were killed and injured, so we had to live with that every day. Even when we got out, we couldn't just walk away. If we did, people would kill us. Every day was like this. Sometimes it would be scary. Other times, everything would work out. Now, after a while, things have calmed down. Everybody is doing their own thing. Life has changed a lot. Maybe I am not so affected by things anymore. Or maybe I just don't feel it that much anymore. I used to feel the stress and the pressure. Not anymore, though. (Laughs) - Was it hard to hear the story that the media was spreading about you? The media had been going around saying that I had become a terrorist, and that people were trying to kill me. Also, they were saying I tried to blow up the World Trade Center. To be honest, those things were not true. Of course I wanted to destroy the towers. Why? Because I knew the whole world was in trouble. As far as what I did was concerned, that's something I would like to forget. For me, a crime is a criminal act. Whether it be terrorism, or murder, murder is murder. Whatever the case, why can't you not punish the person who is responsible for the crime? It's the same thing when I killed my mother. How could I punish myself for what my father did? As for myself, maybe there are some things I could say. Nobody should be able to say anything about me that they would not say about someone else. This is how I feel. However, in this case I must not talk about it. Just because I want to talk to you about something doesn't mean that we can talk. Our family is not like other families. Please don't ask me about my personal life. Do I have problems? Well... I'm not a normal person.

What do you think about the food you ate? (If it was good) the taste of the foods. (if it's bad) What did the other person eat? What are your plans for the rest of your day? The person who ate the most? How did it taste? Did it satisfy your hunger? When you finished eating, how did your stomach feel? Was it full? If it wasn't, did something else fill it? Do you feel hungry again soon? Are you hungry now? You feel full. What's the story? Were you a good listener? It's a nice day outside. How was the weather? Your head hurts. Are there any special foods you'd like to try? Would you like some of these? Have you had any of this before? Where are you now, exactly? Is there anything else you want to eat right now (or anything at all)?

(What is your best memory? Let me know!)

You want a sandwich? My sandwich is not in the fridge.

It's not cold. It is hot. I was afraid to ask you. Here you are. Do it. You want some coffee? I have some in my cupboard. Would it be ok if I drank it now instead? Yes, please. Ok. Thank you, thank you! Do something nice for yourself. We're in a public place. Now please, go somewhere else. Is it ok to be alone now that we're alone? We'd rather be together. Have we been alone for a while? Not really. Did you have fun? Don't go away. Come here. Good morning. My name is Sally. The name's Sally, and I'm here to help. Why did I wake you up? Because I had to get up early. So I didn't get to sleep. Wasn't that nice? That's why I woke you early today. That was a really long time ago. Today is a new day. If you didn

I didn and sleep in. Don t you know I slept in? But I still had enough energy to do my work.

When did this start? Yesterday. Does it matter? No. Can I talk to you? Of course. Please. This is important. Let's go to the park. Where? Why? This place is really nice. No, I don't need a map.

Just tell me where I should go. There's something you should know. Last night I fell asleep at my desk. And then I kept on working. But then something happened. Something bad. Someone broke in and stole all my stuff. All my clothes. Everything. Oh. Yes. Of that I am sure. Well, you're not going anywhere. Me? Oh, no. Not if you don t want me to. Okay. Fine. Then I'll go home. Stay here with me. Sally? Sally?! What about me? Please don't leave me alone. He's here! Who is it?! I'll help you find him. Who are they? They are my parents. They don' t mean to hurt you or hurt me, but they will if they see you here again. Sorry. For what? He was here last night. Didn't he tell you to stay here? Yeah, he did. Look. People have bad days. Sometimes they need to have a bad day, too. Maybe you need some bad news. Like, my mom and dad are coming to pick me up tomorrow. Will you come with them? Sure. Bye.

What would you like to eat? (Optional)

a) What would your parents say? b) Your friends say. c) Everyone else says. d) No one says anything. e) I would like a chocolate cake.

[I would say:]

The best way to start this is to ask about your day, and what you were doing, what happened, etc. For example, "I'm just sitting here, thinking about my day. I'm going to play a game, or read, then go to the store. What do you think I should do?"

So you ask what your friends are eating, when they're doing that, the next best thing is what they say, so you say "What do your roommates eat?" "How are your coworkers doing?" etc... You could also ask your family if they like anything, but that might sound weird to people who aren't you, just to see if it's okay. The best advice I can give is "Talk to your mom or dad about it. They might not say anything at first, they might be really concerned, you might think it sounds weird, whatever. But they want you to be healthy. You should try to do that anyway. So just talk to them, it will be better for you."

To sum it up, talk about the food you're eating. Ask your other friends what their friends eat, if you want to hear what everyone else is eating and who they are. If you can't decide what to order, ask everyone, especially if the restaurant has a Facebook or Twitter page. It might seem awkward, like it doesn't matter, maybe you'll learn something. Or you could just ask the waitress. She'll probably know what's going on and be happy to help.

A lot of chicken and rice. I'm not too excited about the rice, I didn't even put it on my plate.

In the morning I woke up at 5:00 am to do the first half of the show. It was a crazy day. The guys from Nippon TV came in to give us the news that they were going to be having a broadcast from the same venue as us that morning and they would be showing the match and I was like, "What?" I hadn't been to that stadium before. We got the call and it was from Tatsumi Fujinami. He was excited, because he said he'd been there before and the venue was empty. So we went to the stadium and we had no idea what was going on. When we got there, the place was packed with Japanese fans. A lot more people were there than we thought. There were a lot Japanese people there.

the moment that I saw the Japanese players. For me it's a dream come true. They're all so well-known, they're from my country and that's something that you never think you'll see in your lifetime. And for them to come out and play with us, it felt like we were in the biggest soccer tournament in Japan. Everyone was so excited. You could feel it. My whole body was shaking, all of my nerves were flying and my face was wet. That was the most amazing moment of this whole trip. But the next day, we're in a hotel in Osaka, and on the way to a practice session we go to this ice cream shop. This was my first time going into a Japanese ice-cream shop and seeing the flavors they had. Their flavors were all amazing and different. After that, there was this Japanese TV show that was airing and there were these interviews with the players, which was awesome, but we didn't know what to make of it because we weren't in that country. Then we saw this interview with Yoshinori Muto and he was saying that he had been in Italy the week before, he didn't know it, so we really didn't have any idea. At that moment it hit us. From the beginning we knew it could be something big and this could make history. If this really was it for Japan, then we could really be on our way.

Coffee.

(Smiles)

"Caffeine-free" is an oxymoron. I'd like to have some chocolate, but I'm not going to drink coffee. The coffee is good. And if you want more, you can order it at the counter. There's no need to get up and go to the kitchen. You can have the food. We make it easy for you. If you have a problem, we'll help you with it. It's not a luxury; it's a necessity.

Bacon and eggs

, by the way, is a new book by a nutritionist who is trying to change the conversation about bacon.

Sustainable, Local, and Fair Foods, published by Whole Earth Catalog, is an excellent introduction to the topic of sustainable food, both in the United States and globally. He's a good guy. (I've bought his book, but haven't read it yet.) I also recommend this book. I haven't read that yet. But this was the first one I read, so I thought I'd give it a try. In addition to making me a better cook, it also made me more interested in food as a social justice issue. The book is written by James McWilliams, a PhD candidate in nutritional sciences at the University of Vermont. It's called, which is published by Whole Earth Catalog. McWilliams' research focuses on how food systems are affected by climate change. His new, forthcoming book is an outstanding resource. This is the kind of book that I would like to read more of. In the book he describes the history of bacon and how it was made. A little background is needed. Bacon comes from the Latin word, meaning "bacon," and it's made from pork. However, since the 1700s, pork has been bred to be leaner and more palatable to consumers. For that reason, bacon is often referred to as "pork by-products," or "by-product bacon."

In its original form, the bacon industry was based on the production of beef, although in modern times it has grown to include pork as well. As a result of this, much of the pork produced today is of a poor quality, including the fat. Pork fat is also high in saturated fat, or the "bad" kind. Because of its high saturated-fat content, saturated fats are not recommended for human consumption, even though they are relatively healthy. They are, however, considered to have "good" fatty acids, that is, they have a very low glycemic index. If you want to eat them, you're better off eating fish or poultry. When it comes to cooking with bacon, this is not a big deal. Just don't eat it while you are pregnant. Another issue is that bacon contains saturated and trans fats. Trans fats, also called partially hydrogenated oils, are bad, because they increase the risk of heart disease and stroke. Saturated fats have even more health problems. These fats can increase your risk for developing Type 2 diabetes, heart attack, colon cancer, high blood pressure, certain cancers, osteoporosis, sleep apnea, depression, etc. Here's where things get complicated. While it is generally accepted that saturated fatty acid consumption is linked to heart attacks and strokes, there is still debate about whether or not saturated or trans fatty fat consumption contributes to these conditions. Some researchers think that it does. Others think it doesn't. McWilliam's argument is simple. Eating saturated, trans, monounsaturated, polyunsaturated or omega-3 fats do not promote heart health. On the other hand, eating poly and omega fats promote health, as long as they're consumed in moderation. Poly and omega fats are fats that are found in plant foods and fish. Omega-6 fats also occur naturally in plants, though their levels are lower. Foods that contain omega 6 fatty acids include canola oil, safflower oil and sunflower seed oil. Most of us don't think about consuming these fats when we cook with them. There are many, many ways to incorporate omega 3 fatty oils into our diets. One of them is in a can of salmon, where the fish is cooked, then the oil is added. So when you cook salmon with coconut oil or any other type of oil with omega 9s or alpha-linolenic acid, these oils actually reduce the amount of omega fat in your body. That's why some people say that cooking salmon makes it less healthy. This idea is based in fact. Researchers at Columbia University found that a diet rich in omega fatty-acid rich oils reduced the level of cholesterol in arteries in young, healthy men. What they didn't know was whether this effect would be permanent. After 12 weeks of consuming the same diet, researchers found no difference in total cholesterol levels, LDL cholesterol or HDL cholesterol. Bottom Line: In general, omega and poly-unsaturates are good for you. You can eat a lot of these foods, especially in small amounts. Salmon oil has a special place in our hearts.

I didn't have breakfast.

, I usually eat a lot of eggs and bacon, but I had some bread, some fruit, and some vegetables. It was a little bit boring, to be honest, because I just want to have a nice dinner with my friends. I'm not going to go out to eat. So I ate a bit more, then I took some painkillers, which I've never taken before. They were really good, so I felt better. Then I went back to my apartment. There was another party there and I got to meet a bunch of people. The last time I saw them was in London when I was at the airport. But I don't really feel a connection with them. When I see them, they are just people who are there for the weekend. A lot have gone to the same university. And a few have had the chance to play in the English league. These are the people I hang out with the most. In some ways, we are very similar. We are all very passionate about football and we all love the Premier League. That's why I came to England.

Why did England interest you?

, My family is from England and my father is a player in England's top league, the Championship. My brother is also a professional player. Although, my mother is an English citizen and has lived in Germany for many years. She is very proud of my Englishness. For me, it's all about the opportunity to live in a country where football is so popular. Soccer is my passion and it has been in my blood since I can remember., My parents are from Germany and have lived there since my parents were children. My brother was born in Munich and is now playing in Bayern Munich. He's a fantastic footballer and a great person. However, since he was very young, he has wanted to follow in his brother's footsteps. At the age of six, his father, who is German, decided to move back. From there, football became his passion. At the moment, there is no doubt that football in Europe is the biggest and most popular sport in our country. People from all over the world, including Germany, come to watch football. This is why the Bundesliga is one of the top leagues in this country and why our national team is always at a high level. As a young player, that is something I have always wanted for myself. After playing for Hamburg, Bayern and now Liverpool, this is what I want for my future.

I ate a salad with grilled chicken.

the salad I had was a combination of cucumber, carrot, and some kind of salad dressing with olive oil and lemon juice. I don't know what it was called. It was really good. And I also had a grilled tuna sandwich with mayo and salad. The tuna was great. But I'm not going to say it's the best tuna I've ever had. My mom's tuna is the one that I grew up eating. So it wasn't as good as my mom. We had some salmon and then some crab cake. There's a lot of different things on the menu. You can't go wrong with anything on it.
