Short Bio-

Private Tinbrook Chamberlain Baker was born in Monroe, Michigan, in 1834 and lived there with his family before enlisting in the Union Army during the Civil War. He served bravely in Company A of the 8th Michigan Cavalry, a regiment noted for its service in Kentucky and Tennessee. Mustered in on December 30, 1862, Baker participated in campaigns leading up to the Battle of Knoxville. He died in Knoxville, Tennessee, of dysentery in 1863 at General Hospital No. 2, a facility now known as the Tennessee School for the Deaf. He is buried in Knoxville National Cemetery, where his service and sacrifice are memorialized among his fellow Union soldiers.

Long Bio-

Private Tinbrook Chamberlain Baker was born in Monroe, Michigan, in 1834, where he grew up in a large family and later married. Before the Civil War, he lived an ordinary life, but like many young men of his time, he answered the call to preserve the Union. Baker enlisted on December 30, 1862, joining Company A of the 8th Michigan Cavalry Regiment, a unit known for its hard fighting and difficult campaigns through Kentucky and Tennessee. Photographs from the period show Baker armed with a Colt Army revolver tucked into his belt, a sign that he may have had some personal means compared to other soldiers. The 8th Michigan Cavalry saw extensive service during the war, taking part in critical operations leading up to the Battle of Knoxville in late 1863. During these campaigns, Baker fell ill and was taken to General Hospital No. 2 in Knoxville, Tennessee, which was located in a building that now serves as the Tennessee School for the Deaf. He died of dysentery in 1863, one of many soldiers who succumbed to disease and the harsh realities of wartime medicine. His name is recorded in the Register of Volunteer Deaths from 1861 to 1865, preserving his memory among Michigan's fallen sons. Today, Pvt. Tinbrook Chamberlain Baker rests in Plot 201 of the Knoxville National Cemetery, his service marked by a simple government-issued headstone. His life reflects the courage and sacrifice of thousands of volunteer soldiers who left their homes to fight for the Union cause during America's bloodiest conflict.
