(The following advice is for when the agent hasn't said exactly how to mention the Twitter activity in the query.)

The following are queries that led to offers of representation for writers who had a positive Twitter conversation with an agent and/or got an agent like in a pitch event:

Thank you so much for your #PitMad like!

Thank you so much for messaging me on Twitter about your interest in my young adult contemporary

It was the recent winner of the #RevPit contest on Twitter

Thank you so much for expressing your interest in my pitch for LUCID during the #Pitdark Twitter event.

I'm querying you after a twitter conversation between you and your client [name redacted] (https://twitter.com/andreasomberg/status/[redacted]).

Based on your enjoyment of Drake and our exchange on Twitter last night

Thank you for starring my #PitMad pitch yesterday on Twitter: LAPD volunteer sets out to clear her dean husband when he's accused of murder but the trail leads back to him GONE GIRL+CASTLE #PitMad #A #M.

On the April 26th DVPit twitter pitch event, you hearted one of my pitches indicating you would like to see my query.

[personal note. agent had liked my #DVPit pitch, and reproduced that pitch so she'd remember it.]

Thank you so much for expressing interest in my query during PitchMas!

Thank you for your interest in my #Pitmad tweet, "Sherlock Holmes meets Fullmetal Alchemist when an ex army doctor teams up with a magician to solve his patient's murder."

Thank you for liking our #PitMatch connection!
