

Greetings!

Today in class we will be listening to a radio broadcast for the full 57 minutes. It is an episode of “This American Life” from National Public Radio (NPR). Here is the description of what you are about to hear:

Over the course of six months, reporter and TAL contributor Jack Hitt followed a group of inmates at a high-security prison as they rehearsed and staged a production of the last act—Act V—of Hamlet.

I’ll be starting the show right at the bell, and it will go to the bell at the end of class, so I’m putting my comments in writing.

During the show, I’d recommend having a notebook and pen out. My experience in the past is that people find this to be inspiring and thought-provoking, no matter what your topic for your essay on Hamlet is going to be. If you want to have your copy of the play open as well, that might be helpful.

Please do not talk during the show.

If you have other questions for me, please save them until the end of the period.

Enjoy the show today!

Greetings!

Today in class we will be listening to a radio broadcast for the full 57 minutes. It is an episode of “This American Life” from National Public Radio (NPR). Here is the description of what you are about to hear:

Over the course of six months, reporter and TAL contributor Jack Hitt followed a group of inmates at a high-security prison as they rehearsed and staged a production of the last act—Act V—of Hamlet.

I’ll be starting the show right at the bell, and it will go to the bell at the end of class, so I’m putting my comments in writing.

During the show, I’d recommend having a notebook and pen out. My experience in the past is that people find this to be inspiring and thought-provoking, no matter what your topic for your essay on Hamlet is going to be. If you want to have your copy of the play open as well, that might be helpful.

Please do not talk during the show.

If you have other questions for me, please save them until the end of the period.

Enjoy the show today!