

Virtual Trust Salon, hosted by Rimma Boshernitsan, The Dialogue, Outthinkers. The goal of these salons is crowdsource ideas and to design for trust. My notes help me to crystallize my learnings as well.

I suggested

- Promote active listening and storytelling as tools for building trust among team members.
- Advocate for the creation of safe spaces for open and honest conversations about trust and accountability.

My takeaways from others in the conversation

- How to design from trust instead of designing for trust in the workplace.
- How to advocate for emotional intelligence and empathy as essential elements for building trust in the workplace.
- How to encourage vulnerability and authenticity in communication to build trust among team members.
- Highlight the importance of transparency in decision-making processes to maintain trust during challenging times or crisis
- Promote co-accountability, where both leaders and team members take responsibility for building and maintaining trust.
- Advocate for leaders to be open to feedback

- Advocate for clarity of purpose, trust in the work, and co-accountability as essential elements for trust-building in organizations.
