

Skoll was born to a family of nobles known for their standing in the political scene. From the moment Skoll could walk and talk he was groomed to be the perfect son, the perfect politician. His youth was spent studying and learning to navigate the political scene and make deals and connections. His life would've played out as his parents intended if not for their own negligence and leaving the child with lackluster security because of which the child was taken by a group of lycanthropes for ransom. The exchange did not go well and the young politician ended up getting bitten. When he was returned to his family they were less than pleased to find out what had become of their son and so years were spent trying to undo the curse while keeping it under the rug for the families standing. After many visits to experts and many experimental treatments resulted in Skoll becoming neither human nor lycanthrope. He remained half shifted at all times. Wings, ears arms and legs of a bat. That made the family reputation plummet because there was no logical explanation for the change the young lord went through. For his lackluster appearance Skoll was forced to make up in his performance and studies. But there is so much one can pretend to be. Skoll ended up sneaking out from time to time when he met a young man named Sol. Sol shone as brightly as the sun and lit up Skoll's dark world. Skoll found himself often sneaking out to meet with Sol, constantly chasing the young man like his name entailed. The wolf that chases the sun. But when things started looking up for the politician it all came crashing down because he was careless and the couple were found. Skoll suffered the worst beating in his life. It left him on death's door and half blind but still the young man flew out to find his lover to make sure he is okay. Only to find him dead. That was the straw that broke the camels back and Skoll ran away from home taking up odd jobs as a mercenary. Soon discovering an affinity for magic and a side effect of the experimental treatments apart from the half shifted appearance: the ability to shoot the flames that burn him from the inside out into the world.
