

What stood out to you?

- The journaling time. That was where we were made to use the time as it was productive to us. Very helpful
- Primary sources in the LOC
- The extensive list of resources for primary sources.
- I really enjoyed looking at primary sources, and finding out about primary sources I can use in my classroom next year. I'm looking forward to learning about more resources and instructional practices!
- I really enjoyed how everyone was able to connect on some level and debrief from the school year.
- The picture analysis and freedom school reading was nice
- The artifact activity. Everyone brought such different experiences to the program.
- I liked the unstructured nature of some of the time. I feel like it's a healthy challenge to not have everything scripted and it makes me feel like an adult and not like I'm being talked down to.
- Being in a room with like minded individuals and having the chance to collaborate with others. Also, finding practical ways to integrate primary sources into the classroom.

What questions do you have after today?

- What are we expected to use in our classes in the upcoming year/ what are you looking for us to do in our class in the year to come.
- Writing about Primary Sources
- How can I adapt my classroom/teaching for the better?
- Will we share our writing?
- I noticed we didn't discuss the readings much. Are these just sort of to guide are thinking or will we engage more in person with them going forward?
- How can we facilitate having students (especially younger students) find their own primary sources?
