Wonder,

 a fascination with something new,

It's a euphoric feeling. It's something so short lived. Many experience it as a child, and it lessens with age.

I would like for a website to embody that feeling of surprise and innocence.

What would it look like?

What would it sound like?

What would it feel like?

What would it tell?

For there to be wonder, there should be a constant sense of adventure. Always having change. I guess there's many ways to do that.

A website where you can cloud watch - It's a sky that never stops changing for the background. It shows the clouds moving, and the user can make shapes from the clouds.

A website that keeps growing - It's a website where all drafts are kept and new ones keep being added. It's just a monstrosity of web design that keeps getting more and more complicated.

A sinking abyss - A website where the user keeps falling further into the ocean. The background is the water darkening and images of creatures and things pop up continuously. It never ends, but it's not frightening. The fall is slow and calm.

Endless link bars - a website where there are never ending link bars to click on that bring you to other parts of the website or online links. It's just a page of unlabeled links that goes on forever.

Those are a few ideas of what a website about wonder would be.
