

NEUTRISPACE COLONY

The first night at the Neutrispace colony was one of the worst. None of the members were able to sleep, not even Captain Karl. We thought it would be because of the radiation transmitted by the D3 satellite, from the intercommunication spacecraft with our planet. However, the next day we started our expedition, tired, but eager to start at last, so we could learn more about that new planet. We had settled in an elevated area from where we could see a lot of vegetation.

We had been walking for hours and we were already beginning to lose hope, it seemed that we had already passed through that place repeatedly. Despite this, the captain insisted on continuing. We had to go in a hurry, it was getting dark and there was almost no supply left. We kept walking, and suddenly, among some very tall trees we found what looked like artificial buildings. It was a surprise to everyone. As we explored them, Captain Karl could not contain his emotion.

The first thing we did was look if there was anyone else in that place. We thought we were the only ones exploring that area. Once we made sure of that, the captain gave us the order to inspect everything. I had never seen trees like those, they were so huge!
