#DLFteach chat hosted by Resource Sharing & Professional Development Subgroup
January 10, 2017 at 2:00 PM & 8:00 PM ET

General theme: How can (or should?) librarians, especially digital collections librarians, approach incorporating information privacy and security education into information literacy?

Suggested Resources

- Larson, Quincy. How to Encrypt Your Entire Life in Less than an Hour. Free Code Camp, November 9, 2016.
- Williams, Candace. A 70-Day Web Security Action Plan for Artists and Activists Under Siege. Medium, November 10, 2016.
- Phetteplace, Eric. Online Privacy in Post-Election America. ACRL TechConnect Blog, December 14, 2016.
- Library Freedom Project.

2:00 or 8:00 PM

Welcome to #DLFteach chat!

Tonight's chat is hosted by the Resource Sharing & Professional Development subgroup and project leaders.

Follow along with the #DLFteach hashtag, & don't forget to include it in your responses along with the Q number (e.g. Q1)

#DLFteach questions will be tweeted from @CLIRDLF

Ready? Here we go! #DLFteach

First, please introduce yourself! #DLFteach

2:10 or 8:10 PM

Q1: What is the most important thing for users of digital collections to understand about information privacy? #DLFteach

2:20 or 8:20 PM

Q2: Are there best practices in information privacy/security education from your experience/perspective? What are they? #DLFteach

2:30 or 8:30 PM

Q3: How do you address information privacy and security in your instruction? #DLFteach

2:40 or 8:40 PM

Q4: Does your library's info lit program have a goal related to privacy/security? If yes, what is it? If not, do you think it should? #DLFteach

2:50 or 8:50 PM

Q5: How does (or could) information privacy and security intersect with other topics of info lit at your institution? #DLFteach

Conclusion (end of the hour)

Thank you for participating in today's / tonight's #DLFteach chat!

Don't forget to join the Google Group to stay updated! More info at https://www.diglib.org/groups/digital-library-pedagogy #DLFteach

Like #DLFteach chats? Want to be part of an ongoing learning community? Tell us what YOU would like to learn about! https://goo.gl/forms/3jUwUCcXasuQ6ePe2