

Career Reflection

For the previous 5 years I have been educated on the professional aspect that goes into creating and formulating my personal opinions and dispersing them to the public. This has been a challenging but rewarding experience.

From covering sports, to filming news reports, and creating my own media packages, the skills learned at Ohio State have allowed me to become an effective writer and informational journalist.

My first news report at Ohio State was a pivotal moment. Despite feeling overwhelmed and off-topic, this experience became a blessing in disguise. Each class and topic learned helped me understand what journalism truly is, rather than what I initially thought it was.

Taking classes such as International Perspective on Media allowed for the first time in my life to consider foreign views on subjects, growing my mind as well as my pen. From a Public Opinions class where I formulated how the opinion of the public is curated. Each class enrolled and completed tuned myself not only as a writer, but as a person.

As humans we are made to grow, and every report is an opportunity to grow and learn. Through not just my schooling, but also my professional career ensuring that my journey of growth never stops.
