*How many of you can tell me whose picture is on the one-dollar bill? It's George Washington, the father of our country. Every day in America millions and millions of people see a picture of George Washington when they pull out their wallets.

As a young boy in school, George Washington was asked to write down 110 rules of good behavior. Can you imagine? 110 rules! One of the rules was not to wear dirty clothes. Another rule was not to speak when other people are speaking.

George Washington must have learned valuable lessons from all those rules of behavior because he grew up to be a good man and a great leader. Write down five of your own rules of good behavior, and then the next time you see a one-dollar bill, look at George Washington and remember that good behavior pays.
