

Delightful Learning

by Michelle Gibson

Homeschooling my children is happiness. We read lovely living books, perform purposeful projects, and learn about interesting items. We school at home, at the park, and on nature walks. We get to learn according to our individualized styles and marvelous methods. The best part is I get to be with my chummy children and spend more time together as a family who is fun to be around. Because homeschooling is greatly gratifying, I have to remember to take breaks, rest, and enjoy other aspects of life like cooking, cleaning, and pursuing personal passions. I try to give us regular breaks, slow down, and enjoy the process to prevent burnout, whereas if I don't, I am often forced to decelerate. During these times, I try to focus on areas of my life that need attention like my house, my health, and my marriage until balance is achieved. Being a teacher and learning alongside my charmingly cute children is definitely delightful.
