

SOC 205 Course Summary

About this Course Pack

SOC205 is an introductory course as well as the sequence for sociology majors, or for those seeking general credit. In this course, students will use sociological principles to critically analyze social problems and explore causes, consequences, and solutions. Topics can include poverty, racism, mass incarceration, education, homelessness, addiction, policing, climate change, and more.

The coursework for SOC205 This course incorporates a variety of instructional materials, including: weekly online-learning activities, including independent assignments and prompts to facilitate written interactive discussions.

Included in this course pack are a course map, syllabus, instructor guide, and an assessment package that includes weekly tasks and the course midterm and final. The course readings include an open textbook for each topic.

Accessibility Statement

There are no known accessibility issues in the course materials presented in this course pack.

Attribution and Licensing

Creator: Anonymous for Open Oregon Educational Resources

Published: 2024

Relevance: Course based on SOC 205 at Clatsop Community College

Level: Undergraduate

License: CC BY-NC-SA 4.0.