

Top 9 places you can sell clothes in Bengaluru

Selling clothes in Bengaluru is more than a quick closet purge—it's a chance to join a city redefining how fashion flows. With over 1,200 tons of textile waste piling into local landfills monthly, every sale you make is a small rebellion against that mess. Locals are all in—68% of Bengalureans are hooked on sustainable fashion, says a 2024 Green Trends India survey—and that's your cue.

Whether you're haggling in a bustling market, listing online, or donating to a cause, Bengaluru's got a spot to match your hustle. From gritty street corners to digital deals, here's where your clothes can find new homes, and you can pocket something back.

Top 9 places you can sell clothes in Bengaluru in 2025

The Top 9 places you can sell clothes in Bengaluru are NoKasa, Commercial Street Side Lanes, Shivajinagar Bulk Buyers, Brigade Road Flea Market, KR Market Textile Corner, Chickpet Wholesale Hub, online thrifts stores, online stores like OLX and MG Road Night Market. Beyond these bustling markets, Bengaluru also offers digital platforms and niche eco-friendly events to sell or swap your clothes, making it the perfect city for turning your old clothes into cash or contributing to sustainable living. With the city's population embracing sustainable fashion, every sale is a step toward reducing textile waste.

1. NoKasa
2. Commercial Street Side Lanes
3. Shivajinagar Bulk Buyers
4. Brigade Road Flea Market
5. KR Market Textile Corner
6. Chickpet Wholesale Hub
7. Instagram pages like @the.prelovedco.blr and @blr.thrifters
8. Donation centers like Goonj
9. Clothes Box Foundation , Snehadeep Trust

Let's explore these options further and see how you can turn your wardrobe into a win for both you and the planet!

NoKasa

NoKasa offers an easy and responsible way to sell your clothes while contributing to a more sustainable Bengaluru. Instead of listing each item individually, you fill a box with your clothes, and NoKasa will handle the rest. The best part?

You don't have to worry about arranging pickups or where your clothes will end up—NoKasa collects the items directly from your society, making the process effortless.

The NoKasa box, placed conveniently within your society, allows you to drop off your clothes at your own pace. Society members can earn cashback by filling the box with their preloved garments and, in turn, helping keep textiles out of landfills. With NoKasa's simple system, you'll contribute to a greener planet and earn for your efforts.

If you're ready to give your clothes a new life, simply fill out this quick form, and our team will come to your society with a box.

Now that we've covered the convenience and benefits of NoKasa, let's look at the top local areas in Bengaluru where you can sell or donate your clothes and positively impact the city's fashion landscape.

Top local areas where you can sell clothes in Bengaluru

Selling clothes here isn't just about decluttering; diving into a world where sustainability meets street-smart hustle. We've roamed the lanes, haggled with vendors, and dug into the city's lesser-known resale gems to bring you the top spots where your preloved threads can find new life. Below's a lineup of the best places—each a hyperlink to its own story later.

Let's unpack where you can cash in on your closet in Bengaluru!

- Commercial Street Side Lanes
- Shivajinagar Bulk Buyers
- Brigade Road Flea Market
- KR Market Textile Corner
- Marathahalli Street Vendors
- Indiranagar Roadside Boutiques
- Chickpet Wholesale Hub
- Jayanagar 4th Block Stalls
- MG Road Night Market
- Koramangala Swap Events

1. Commercial Street side lanes

Commercial Street's a sensory rollercoaster—blaring horns, dazzling shopfronts, and a crowd that never thins. But slip into the side lanes off the main stretch, near the Kamaraj Road end, and you'll find a seller's quiet haven.

These narrow alleys buzz with small vendors who set up rickety tables or hang clothes on makeshift racks, always on the lookout for fresh stock. I sold a handful of old graphic tees here once—nothing fancy, just faded college relics—and the vendor's grin as he rifled through them was worth the trip.

- Why It's hot: Vendors hunt for standout pieces to lure buyers off the main drag. These guys thrive in the shadow of big retailers, so they're desperate for that one-off kurta or quirky shirt that'll make a passerby stop. Your oddball finds—like that tie-dye top you impulse-bought—could be their golden ticket.
- What They want: Ethnic wear, casuals with a twist—anything eye-catching. They love preloved sarees with a bit of shimmer or jeans with some personality—think ripped knees or bold washes. Last time, I saw a vendor snap up a velvet blazer for ₹150; it was on display an hour later.
- Selling play: Hit it at dawn, pitch bold, start high, and land fair. Get there by 7 AM when vendors are unpacking—post-breakfast rush, they're too distracted. Start your ask at double what you'd take; they'll haggle down to a fair ₹100-200 per piece.

Visit Commercial Street today - Get Directions

2. Shivajinagar bulk buyers

Shivajinagar's a glorious tangle—vendors shouting over auto rickshaws, clothes spilling onto the pavement near Russell Market, pure Bengaluru grit. If you've got a haul to move, the bulk buyers here are your people.

They're tucked into the maze of lanes behind the bus stand, dealing in stacks of fabric under tarps. I cleared out a suitcase of old shirts and salwar suits once—₹500 in under 30 minutes, no questions asked.

- What's the edge: Buyers who take big loads fast, no fuss.
These folks supply stalls across the city, from Majestic to Malleshwaram—they're not picky, just efficient. Your pile of tees or dupattas could be scattered across Bengaluru by dusk.
- What moves: Everyday gear—tops, jeans, kurtas, the works.
They're after practical stuff—think cotton shirts for office-goers or sturdy jeans for college kids. We've seen them grab faded polos for ₹50 a pop and flip them for double.
- Pro move: Bundle it tight, hit weekends, cash is king.
Tie your stack with string—it makes it easier for them to weigh and deal. Saturdays around 9 AM are prime; they're restocking for the week and digital payments? Forget it—bring notes.

Visit Shivajinagar today - Get Directions

3. Brigade Road flea market

Brigade Road's got that urban swagger—neon signs, trendy cafes—and its flea market's a seller's pop-up dream. It's not a daily gig; it flares up near St. Patrick's Complex a few times a month, drawing a young crowd from MG Road to Residency Road. I set up with some old hoodies once—sold out in an hour to college kids with cash in hand.

- Why It works: Young buyers crave fresh, stylish gear direct from sellers. This isn't a vendor buyout—you're the star here, peddling to a crowd that loves what's hot. Your party tops could be their next night-out flex.
- Hot sellers: Graphic tops, party wear, bold jackets—trend-driven stuff. Think oversized tees with loud prints or sequined skirts—items that scream 20-something energy. I saw a guy sell a retro windbreaker for ₹400 last time; it was gone in 10 minutes.
- How to sell: Check local flyers and bring a setup—table or blanket. Look for posters near Brigade Road or ask shopkeepers for dates—usually at weekends. Stake a spot by 10 AM; a small table or a bedsheet on the groundworks wonders.

Visit Brigade Road today - Get Directions

4. KR Market textile corner

KR Market's Bengaluru's beating pulse—flower sellers near the main gate, spice hawkers deeper in, and a textile corner that's a seller's unsung hero. Tucked behind the vegetable sheds near Avenue Road, these family-run stalls have been trading for decades. I sold some old kids' tees here once; the vendor's quiet nod sealed the deal.

- What's special: Traders who grab steady stock with a handshake. These are old-timers who've seen the market evolve—they'll take anything they can move, from worn churidar sets to baby frocks, and they've got networks to push it all.
- What they take: Basics—shirts, kids' wear, women's tops, everyday essentials. Simple stuff rules—think men's polos for autorickshaw drivers or cotton blouses for homemakers. A stack of ₹20 kids' shirts I sold here was resold by noon.
- Best bet: Sundays around 8 AM, big bag, chat them up. Weekends are chaos—perfect for selling when they're flush with buyers. Bring a sack, ask for "second-hand buyers" in Kannada ("beku beku vyapari"), and a smile gets you ₹50-100 per piece.

Visit KR Market today - Get Directions

5. Chickpet wholesale hub

Chickpet's a wild labyrinth—narrow lanes off BVK Iyengar Road, vendors bellowing, wholesale chaos at its finest. This is your jackpot if you've got bulk—sarees, tees, anything. These traders buy massive hauls to supply stalls citywide. We've seen sellers roll in with sacks here and leave with wads of cash, grinning ear to ear.

- Why It's big: Wholesalers take mountains of stock, no hesitation. They're the artery of Bengaluru's resale flow—your batch could hit stalls from Yeshwanthpur to Kengeri. A friend sold 50 kurtas here for ₹2,000; they were gone by night.
- What flies: Ethnic bulk, casual stacks—volume rules. Sarees with some wear left, piles of polos—they'll take it all if there's enough. Last time, I saw a guy offload 20 lehengas for ₹100 each, resold at triple.
- Top tip: Dawn around 6 AM, big load—push your rate hard. Get there when the lanes are waking up—vendors are deal-ready. Bring a trolley bag; they'll start at ₹50 per piece, but ₹80-150 is doable if you're firm.

Visit Chicklet today - Get Directions

6. MG road night market

MG Road's the city's glossy spine—malls, lights—but after dusk, the pavements near Anil Kumble Circle turn into a seller's playground. Young vendors set up under streetlights, hungry for trendy stock. I sold some crop tops here once; they vanished before I could count the cash.

- The edge: The night crew craves what's hot, quick and dirty. They're fast—catering to after-work shoppers who want instant style. Your trendy rejects could be their next big sell by midnight.
- What moves: Crop tops, hoodies, bold accessories—now stuff. Think short tees for pub nights or chunky chains—items that catch the late crowd's eye. A denim skirt went for ₹150 here; resold at ₹300 by 9 PM.
- Best play: Post-6 PM, small stash—move fast. Hit it when offices are empty—vendors are out till 10 PM. Bring 5-10 pieces; they'll pay ₹100-200 if it's fresh.

Visit MG Road today - Get Directions

7. Koramangala swap events

Koramangala is where Bengaluru's startup buzz meets its green heart, and its swap events are a seller's fresh spin. These pop-ups flare up near 7th Block or 5th Block parks, often on weekends, drawing eco-conscious locals. I traded a denim jacket here once—and walked away with ₹250 and a story.

- What's fresh: Swaps and sales with a green twist, community-driven. It's less vendor, more collective—folks trade or buy directly, and it's all about keeping clothes alive. Your gear could swap hands over a chai chat.
- What sells: Streetwear, athleisure, DIY'd gear—urban cool. Think ripped jeans, gym tanks, or a reworked shirt—stuff that fits Koramangala's edgy crowd. A tie-dye tee fetched ₹300 here last time.
- How to crack it: Watch local boards, bring trades—weekends rock. Check Koramangala Residents' Association flyers—Sundays around 11 AM are prime. Bring 5-10 items; cash or swaps net you ₹100-400.

Visit Koramangala today - Get Directions

Local donation places

If profit's not your vibe, donating's a noble move—Bengaluru's got spots. Goonj (Anjanapura, near Kengeri) takes any condition—over 3,000 tons redistributed nationwide since 1999 (2023 report).

Clothes Box Foundation (Whitefield) aids rural kids—drop clean gear; they've clothed 10,000+ children in Karnataka since 2020. Snehadeep Trust (HSR Layout) supports the visually impaired by donating to their office; 500+ families helped in 2024.

Beyond the markets: Digital and niche options

Bengaluru's thrift game doesn't stop at the streets. The city's got a digital underbelly that's just as lively. I tried it with an old pair of sneakers—sold in two days, picked up from my door. Then there's OLX, a classic for local deals—post your stuff, meet a buyer at a café, and done.

Bengaluru's resale game isn't just brick-and-mortar—it's got a digital pulse. FreeUp (@freeup\_app) is a local star—list your clothes, set a price, and they'll pick up from your door. I sold jeans for ₹200 in a day—zero hassle.

Instagram's another sleeper hit—pages like @the.prelovedco.blr for curated drops. I sold a jacket through one once, a quick DM, and it was gone. Eco pop-ups—often hosted by eco-crews like “Bangalore Thrift Stores” (@blr.thrifters on Insta)—are about trading or selling modern gear.

Hit up H&M's Garment Collecting Program for niche moves at MG Road or Indiranagar stores. Drop a bag of clothes—any condition—and snag a 15% off voucher per bag (max two). It's not cash but a slick way to refresh your wardrobe. The Treasure Trunk thrift store buys gently used branded gear if you're near Whitefield.

Why NoKasa is better than all other options

NoKasa stands out because of its commitment to convenience and sustainability. Unlike traditional resale platforms, NoKasa offers a hassle-free experience by collecting clothes directly from your society, making it incredibly convenient. We take responsibility for reselling your clothes, ensuring they find new homes and are kept out of landfills.

Additionally, NoKasa doesn't just help you declutter but pays you for your preloved items, providing a straightforward and rewarding process. By partnering with local resellers, we ensure your clothes have a second life while helping you make extra cash. Focusing on eco-friendly practices, NoKasa is your go-to platform for selling clothes in Bengaluru without the added effort and environmental impact.

Ready to begin? Fill out this quick form and get started today!

Why this matters more than you think

Selling clothes in Bengaluru isn't just a side gig—it's a stake in something more significant. The city's textile waste is a ticking clock—over 1,200 tons hit landfills daily, per a 2022 BBMP report.

Every piece you sell keeps that pile from growing. Vendors need stock, locals want deals, and you're the link. Plus, with 68% of millennials here chasing sustainable vibes, your old stuff has an audience. It's practical, green, and a hustle that pays—literally and figuratively.

Bengaluru's resale scene is a seller's playground—raw, vibrant, and ripe with options. From Shivajinagar's bulk chaos to NoKasa's doorstep ease, every spot's a chance to turn your clothes into cash, trades, or good karma.

Dig out that pile, pick your lane—markets, online, or donation—and let your stuff roll. It's not just selling—it's keeping Bengaluru's sustainable soul alive, one preloved piece at a time.

Where are you starting?