

English 307: Survey of American Literature from Origins to the Civil War
Fall 2023; Section: 03 (6380)
Hours: Mon/Thurs 10:00-11:15 a.m.
Room: East Building 618A
Professor: Austin Bailey
Email: abail@hunter.cuny.edu
Office Hours: Fridays 12-3 and by appointment
Office: 1238 Hunter West and on Zoom

Course Description:

The above image, Tragic Prelude, is a mural painted by the artist John Steuart Curry, which depicts the insurrectionist activities of radical abolitionist John Brown. As Curry's image suggests, Brown was larger than life—a myth as much as a man. Yet the image also depicts the irreconcilable tensions between North and South over the defining issue of slavery—an issue that Brown was at the center of and acted as a catalyst for. Curry's painting also represents the point in time in which our class concludes (the eve of the Civil War) and it speaks (indirectly) to the powerful role that literature—both written and in the form of public oratory—played in shaping the direction of the United States, for Brown and his infamous activities were praised by Transcendentalists Ralph Waldo Emerson and Henry David Thoreau, among others, as examples of what they called the “higher law,” meaning the law of organic moral truth and righteous action superseding conventional law.

This course constitutes a survey of some key works of literature produced in the United States, from its “Origins”—i.e., pre-republican colonial and Puritan literature—to the Civil War (1861). While our primary focus will be the texts themselves, we will also take care to historicize, discussing the socio-political contexts out of which these texts emerged. Along the way, we will ask questions about how the literature we are reading reflects and construes issues of race, gender, and sexuality, as well as philosophy, religion, and politics.

Letter to Students on the First Day:

Hi all. Before I go about listing more information on this syllabus, I want to begin by writing a brief, open-ended letter to you. I do this in order to set the tone for the semester and to let you know that I want this class itself to be an open-ended invitation for us to learn, think, inquire, struggle, strive, and even dream together. As a teacher, I deeply value every student’s unique perspective and contribution to the learning community that is our classroom. And while I am “the professor” in this class, I am certainly not the proprietor of any exclusive or privileged body of knowledge. For me, this is not what teaching is or should be about. Rather, as a teacher, my ultimate goal is to help others open doors to their own intellectual and creative freedom, not to police or gate-keep those doors. Knowledge making is world making. As such, it is for anyone and everyone. My pledge to you this semester is that I will try to conduct myself in a way that upholds these general principles and values (even though I may fall short at times). What I expect from you in return (beyond striving to meet the basic course requirements listed below) is simply that you try to make something meaningful out of your learning experience and time in this class, and that you invest in your own critical thinking, following it in whatever direction/s it may take you. And please let me know how I can best support you in this process.

Yours sincerely,
Austin Bailey

Learning Goals/Outcomes:

--Demonstrate knowledge about, and familiarity with, key themes and ideas in the American literature texts covered

--Show analytical facility with one or more texts/authors through student writing and/or multimodal projects that engage texts creatively as well as critically

--Be able to discuss at least some of the historical events and contexts in which the literature of the periods covered was produced

--Demonstrate the ability, through both writing and class discussion, to analyze and close-read literary texts

–Demonstrate the capacity for self-reflection and metacognitive self-awareness about one’s learning, particularly by way of completing the ungrading process (as detailed below)

Course Requirements:

The requirements for this class are as follows:

Read all assigned texts before each class meeting and come to class prepared to discuss those texts with meaningful contributions. Note: “meaningful” does not mean being an expert and showing off that expertise (though if you have it, great!). Rather, meaningful means coming to class with a contribution (an idea or an underlined passage) that matters to you in some way, which you are prepared to discuss, or introduce for the purposes of discussion.

Be respectful to each other; show care and compassion toward your fellow students (as well as to yourself). I think of respect not only as refraining from all hyper-critical, racist, sexist, ableist, or transphobic comments but also as finding positive things to say about one another, as well as leaving ample room and time for others to speak. This last point is especially important. I encourage everyone to speak and am very happy when you do! But just keep in mind that long-winded comments can sometimes discourage others from speaking (even if that is not your intent). It is very important that we all try to maintain an inclusive atmosphere. This equally applies for me, by the way, as your teacher.

Try to complete all writing assignments on time and revise all written assignments at least once, if not more.

Participate in the ungrading process and take that process seriously (even if you have critiques or reservations, which are welcome).

Course Encouragements:

In addition to course requirements, I like to list some course encouragements. Course encouragements are less about requirements you need to meet and more about things you might do to care for yourself. Truthfully, I think of all learning as an invitation to gain something, not as a potential to demonstrate one’s lack of something (which, sadly, is how education is too-often framed). Let’s work towards co-learning with that idea in mind. To that end, here are some course encouragements:

Try to find some joy in the work you do. I realize this is not always easy or even realistic. But I think it is worth reflecting on what gives you joy: on what makes the work you do in this class enjoyable for you and see if you can’t cultivate that practice to help you learn.

Be kind to yourself; practice self-care in ways that work best for you. Think about what you should do (or not do) to be kind and forgiving to yourself, and don’t be afraid to tell me how I might be able to help you in this area.

Try not to worry about being an “expert.” This class is not about judgment or expertise, it’s about critical engagement and finding out what interests you. One of the most common things I hear from students who seldom speak in class—students who write phenomenal papers with wonderful insights—is that they are afraid to sound unintelligent compared to their classmates. Ironically, it’s very likely that any one of their classmates could be having the same exact fear. This doesn’t mean that I expect you to speak up. I understand students can feel more comfortable listening, and that participation depends on a lot of (often hidden) factors. However, I encourage you to try to practice non-judgment toward yourself and to avoid holding yourself to impossible (and likely arbitrary) standards.

Read with a purpose, that is, actively rather than passively. I encourage you to read slowly, deliberately, and to ask questions about the text as you go along. It helps to write these questions down, as well as make underlines in the text for passages you find important or interesting. Even if you are not able to read all of the assigned material, it is best to carefully and closely read at least some of the material. I would argue that doing so is better than reading too quickly or carelessly for total coverage. The reading this semester is fairly short but challenging. I encourage everyone to reflect on your reading process. What do you do when you read? Do you take notes in the margins? Do you google the author and view their Wikipedia page? Do you see what other people have said or written about an author or text online? Do you verbalize your thoughts back to yourself or to someone else? Do you journal? Do you post Facebook or Twitter posts about your reading? All of these things are strategies for interacting meaningfully with the texts. It’s important that you discover for yourself what your best reading process is and try as much as you can to utilize it. That said, it is always better to read something rather than nothing. See if you can’t come to class with at least one idea to contribute to discussion.

Participation:

You are required to actively participate in this class, which means showing up to class prepared to contribute. However, while participation through discussion is important, I also recognize that some students struggle to speak. To that end, you will have opportunities to participate in other ways, such as through group work and in-class or take-home writing assignments. Hunter is a non-attendance taking institution, which means that you cannot be exclusively graded on the category of attendance. I will not be taking attendance every day, and I am completely fine with you missing some class dates (this happens for all of us). But I do expect you to have a generally consistent and active presence in the classroom. If you are going to be absent, especially on an important class date, it would be preferable if you emailed me ahead of time (though this is not required). If you are having trouble coming to class in general, please reach out to me and we will discuss a plan for you to help you succeed despite whatever is preventing you from being in class.

AI Policy:

AI is here to stay, though what exactly its impact will be long-term is debatable. I have no strict policy on this matter; I only ask that you do your work with integrity and that you take it seriously. AI interfaces, such as ChatGTP, can sometimes be helpful in retrieving and condensing widely available information quickly, and they can even help with sentence-level phrasing. Yet they are largely unhelpful when it comes to producing writing that is unique and that has authenticity and complexity. In other words, your own ideas are better than Artificial Intelligence, so I encourage you to only use AI to boost or enhance your own voice, not as a substitute. If you are over-using AI, I may ask that you reconsider your assignment and rework it in such a way that your own voice is nurtured and supported. I will also ask if there is anything I can do to better support you in the writing process so that you feel more confident about your own ideas.

Turnitin:

All writing assignments must be submitted to www.turnitin.com. Please note: turnitin is a plagiarism checker, but I am not using it for that purpose. Truthfully, I am not in agreement with turnitin's messaging, its business model, or its philosophies about teaching. Rather, I'm using it as a repository for your work, so that neither you nor myself lose it, and so I can offer legible feedback on all your papers. I turn off turnitin's plagiarism checking feature, as well as the feature that allows its operating system to collect and own your data (one of its practices I also do not agree with). Turnitin is a free service and you may already have an account from high school or a previous semester. If not, go to www.turnitin.com and register by creating an account. You need to provide an email and password. This does not need to be a Hunter email but any email and password of your choosing. Once you're registered, you must enroll in our class. Each assignment will be labeled with a submission deadline (though all deadlines are flexible). Our class ID and enrollment key are listed below.

Class ID: 40323443

Enrollment Key: Literature

Textbooks:

There are no required textbooks for this class. All texts will be accessible as pdfs or weblinks on our blackboard account under "Readings."

Ungrading the Classroom:

I practice something called "ungrading," a pedagogy that strives to decenter grades as the primary means of assessment. We will read and discuss the blog post below on ungrading by Jesse Stommel as a way of familiarizing ourselves with some of ungrading's core ideas and beliefs. We will discuss it, and pedagogy in general, during our first week of class.

<https://www.jessestommel.com/why-i-dont-grade/>

Instead of receiving grades, students in this class will submit two reflective writings for the whole semester, which I call Learning Narratives (LNs): one at the midterm point and one at the end of the semester. Both of these informal assignments are generally open-ended but should respond to two separate prompts (see below). These LNs will serve as markers of your learning progress and process. They will also enable us to engage in a dialogue about your learning, which will lead us to an alternative way of assessing educational growth beyond grades.

Since grades must be assigned for this course (as CUNY is a grade-giving institution), you will be asked to assign yourself a tentative grade, both in your midterm and end-of-term LN. These grades will apply not to any individual assignments but rather to your overall course performance. In other words, you are reflecting on yourself holistically. I will offer you feedback on your formal writing assignments but I will read your LNs first so that they color my perspective on your writing. This is a deliberate act; it is a way of putting you in control of your own learning narrative and asking me to be responsive to it. LNs are informal writing assignments, so I will not offer much feedback beyond a comment or two.

I aim to have minimal intervention in your process when it comes to your LNs. I will only step in if I think you are evaluating yourself too harshly (which happens more than you might think) or if I feel that your self-reflection is significantly out of synch with what I'm seeing in the classroom and in your essays. Each LN will be submitted simultaneously with your formal essay assignments/projects when those are due.

Midterm Learning Narrative:

Tell me a story about who you are as a student.
How does this class fit into that story?

You might discuss why you are in college, what you're interested in achieving with your degree, and how this class fits into your broader educational goals.

What, for instance, do you value most about your education? How might this class play some role (big or small) in achieving it?

Based on these reflections, what overall (tentative) course grade do you think you have earned at this point in the term?

Please reflect on and answer these questions holistically, without itemizing them. I am interested in your thoughts about this as a process, so please do not feel like you have to justify your course grade. As mentioned above, you are not on trial. This activity is meant to be an open-ended and thoughtful exchange. I am genuinely curious about your own reflections on your learning process. My goal is to let your Learning Narrative guide the feedback I give you on your formal essays, and to have the opportunity to get to know you as a student better. Remember, too, that you do not have to share any information you are not comfortable sharing. What you write about is completely your choice.

Final Learning Narrative:

Now that we have come to the end of the semester, reflect briefly on the work you've done, all that you have learned (if you stop and think, it's probably more than you realize), and your previous LN.

What has transpired?

Do you feel as if you have achieved your goal/s this semester and have those goals changed? If they have changed, how and why?

Lastly, what is one thing about your learning experience in this class that you will always remember?

Based on these reflections, what overall course grade do you think you have earned?

Course Calendar (subject to change when needed):

Please note that dates where readings are listed are the same dates those readings will be discussed

Link to current Hunter College academic calendar

Aug. 28	Introductions/Syllabus/Activity
Aug. 31	Discuss Stommel essay, ungrading, and continue introductions.
Sep. 4	No classes (college closed)
Sep. 7	From Heath Anthology of American Literature : "Beginnings to 1700" + creation myths (read the whole pdf)
Sep. 14	From Heath : "New England" (p.173-177); Stephanie Schnorbus, "Calvin and Locke: Dueling Epistemologies in The New England Primer , 1720-1790"; Selections from Mary Rowlandson's A Narrative of the Captivity and Restoration of Mrs. Mary Rowlandson
Sep. 18	Anne Bradstreet selections; Abram Van Engen, "Advertising the Domestic: Anne Bradstreet's Sentimental Poetics"
Sep. 21	Edwards, "Sinners in the Hands of an Angry God"; Paul Hurh, "Awakening Terror: Hellfire Preaching, Jonathan Edwards, and the Logic of Revivalist Affect" (from American Terror: The Feeling of Thinking in Edwards, Poe, and Melville).
Sep. 25	No classes
Sep. 28	Robert Eggers, The Witch (watch in class)

Oct. 2	Finish The Witch ; academic article on The Witch (TBD)
Oct. 5	from Heath : “The Enlightenment and the Great Awakenings”; selections from Benjamin Franklin and Samson Occom
Oct. 9	No classes (Indigenous People’s Day)
Oct. 12	Phillis Wheatley, selections
Oct. 16	from Heath : “Early Nineteenth Century: 1800-1865”; Ralph Waldo Emerson, from Nature : Introduction, “Nature,” “Idealism,” “Spirit,” “Prospects”
Oct. 19	Emerson, “The American Scholar”
Oct. 23	Henry David Thoreau, “Civil Disobedience”
Oct. 26	Edgar Allan Poe, “The Fall of the House of Usher,” “The Raven,” “The Philosophy of Composition”
Oct. 30	Poe, “The Masque of the Red Death”; in-class video (related to Poe); happy Halloween!
Nov. 2	Poe, “Murders in the Rue Morgue”
Nov. 6	Thomas Wentworth Higginson, “Emily Dickinson’s Letters” (from The Atlantic , 1891); Dickinson’s bio from the Poetry Foundation’s website
Nov. 13	From The Poems of Emily Dickinson (Franklin numbering): Read the google doc called “Dickinson Part I.”
Nov. 16	From The Poems of Emily Dickinson (Franklin numbering): Read the google doc called “Dickinson Part I.”
Nov. 20	Barbara Baumgartner, “Anatomy Lessons: Emily Dickinson’s Brain Poems”; from Calvin Cutter’s Anatomy and Physiology : “Practical Suggestions. Physiology of the Brain” (p. 231-241); “Dickinson Part II”
Nov. 23-26	Thanksgiving break
Nov. 27	Marsden article on Whitman; Whitman, “Song of Myself” from Leaves of Grass (1855 edition)

Nov. 30	In-class workshop on research paper
Dec. 4	Harriet Jacobs, selections from Incidents in the Life of a Slave Girl (read the full pdf)
Dec. 7	Reading on John Brown (TBD)
Dec. 11	Last day goodbyes; exit survey

Final papers due December 22nd by midnight

Academic Honesty Policy (from the Hunter College Senate): Hunter College regards acts of academic dishonesty (e.g. plagiarism, cheating on examinations, obtaining unfair advantage, and falsification of records and official documents) as serious offenses against the values of intellectual honesty. The college is committed to enforcing the CUNY Policy of Academic Integrity and will pursue cases of academic dishonesty according to the Hunter College Integrity Procedures.

The English Department has an annual Prizes and Awards competition. Work that you do in this course might be suitable for submission. Please consider applying by the February deadline. Information will be posted here:

<http://www.hunter.cuny.edu/english/student-opportunities/prizes-awards>

Academic Integrity Statement: Hunter College regards acts of academic dishonesty (e.g., plagiarism, cheating on examinations, obtaining unfair advantage, and falsification of records and official documents) as serious offenses against the values of intellectual honesty. The College is committed to enforcing the CUNY Policy on Academic Integrity and will pursue cases of academic dishonesty according to the Hunter College Academic Integrity Procedures.

Sexual Misconduct Policy: In compliance with the CUNY Policy on Sexual Misconduct, Hunter College reaffirms the prohibition of any sexual misconduct, which includes sexual violence, sexual harassment, and gender-based harassment retaliation against students, employees, or visitors, as well as certain intimate relationships. Students who have experienced any form of sexual violence on or off campus (including CUNY-sponsored trips and events) are entitled to the rights outlined in the Bill of Rights for Hunter College.

- a. Sexual Violence: Students are strongly encouraged to immediately report the incident by calling 911, contacting NYPD Special Victims Division Hotline (646-610-7272) or their local police precinct, or contacting the College's Public Safety Office (212-772-4444).
- b. All Other Forms of Sexual Misconduct: Students are also encouraged to contact the College's Title IX Campus Coordinator, Dean John Rose (jtrose@hunter.cuny.edu or 212-650-3262) or Colleen Barry (colleen.barry@hunter.cuny.edu or 212-772-4534) and seek complimentary services through the Counseling and Wellness Services Office, Hunter East 1123.

- c. CUNY Policy on Sexual Misconduct Link:
<http://www.cuny.edu/about/administration/offices/la/Policy-on-Sexual-Misconduct-12-1-14-with-links.pdf>”

ADA Statement: In compliance with the ADA and with Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act, Hunter College is committed to ensuring educational access and accommodations for all its registered students. Hunter College’s students with disabilities and medical conditions are encouraged to register with the Office of AccessABILITY for assistance and accommodation. For information and appointment contact the Office of AccessABILITY located in Room E1214 or call (212) 772-4857 or TTY (212) 650-3230.