The Local Connection Crisis

New Data on What Communities Need

Nov 20, 2025, 4PM/1PM • event page • video

Our new nationwide poll results show how Americans really connect with their neighbors online — and the surprising gaps that deserve more attention. New_ Public's new app, Roundabout, is about to begin its closed beta testing.

SPEAKERS

Deepti Doshi, Co-Director, New_ Public:

"We believe that just as public parks and libraries are essential offline infrastructure for civic life, the digital era requires a new type of public infrastructure."

Talia Stroud, Co-Founder, New_ Public:

"It's interesting that urban, suburban, and mixed/rural are pretty similar ... That's not the main driver, demographics."

Eli Pariser, Co-Director, New_ Public:

"We saw some signs that stewardship helps ... Stewards on Facebook are constantly battling with the algorithm for what they want to highlight."

Trei Brundrett, Founder-in-Residence, New_ Public:

"Probably the most fun part of this work is working with these stewards in these local communities. Not only to operate these spaces ... but to bring people in."

QUESTIONS

- 1. What are some possible causes or factors that might explain this interest gap?
- 2. What could be different if stewardship was more central to these groups?
- 3. How did you select participants for the study?

KEY IDEAS/TAKEAWAYS

- People already value and use local digital spaces ... but they could be better.
 "Community stewards" could move the needle.
- There's an interest gap between what people are getting from their local digital spaces and what they want.
- People leave local digital spaces when they encounter toxicity, or when the groups make them feel unwelcome, annoyed, overwhelmed, or like they don't fit.
- New_ Public is building Roundabout to fill that internet gap and help people connect with their neighbors.
