Profile

Bernhard Gerhard Creutzfeldt is a studied Nuclear Engineer, accomplished Chemist, and Afghanistan veteran with a self-proclaimed aptitude in 'Practical Metaphysics,' a supposed discipline of science where quoted, 'non-reality interacts and influences our perceptions and interactions with the assumed real world.' Notably, Bernhard is the close descendant of presumably deceased Senior Researcher Joseph Günther

Creutzfeldt, his grandfather and a close mentor figure in his life, steering him into the direction of academia & the hard sciences. It was only after Creutzfeldt's graduation & grandfather's death (an event that unfortunately coincided closely) that Creutzfeldt understood why. Amongst the old man's belongings was paraphernalia from his time working under the Nazi regime of WW2 and sequestered medals for his service in the Reich's laboratories.

Writings and documents kept told the story of a brilliant physicist who studied the nascent nuclear field and watched as colleagues fled from the reich. When such research was further decried and sidelined, he was soon scooped up by the Schutzstaffel and put to work in other secretive projects, some kept even from the Fuhrer and authorized only by Himmler's interest in the occult, projects classified under the SS Ahnenerbe Obskurakorps. For the rest of the war, he dealt with the wondrous and the obscene to further the cause, and was rewarded for his efforts. Near the end though, his talents were noted by the allies, and he was offered a way to continue his research without ending up hanged at the end of the war. He graciously accepted, and was resettled in the United States, starting his own family that stretched to his grandson's now trembling hands. Both the uncovered documents, and their presence at the old man's funeral would get Bernhard in the sights of interested parties in the Pentagon. An expedited basic training & commission in the US Military would find him working with the same things his grandfather wrote about. Things that would bring him to Operation Enduring Freedom. Things that would bring him to opposition with the ORIA. As with many things in the Bush administration, documents regarding Bernhard's activity were shredded and burned. The same happened to Bernhard's mind, forcing his discharge from the Army and a cocktail of psychoactives he now must take to keep from spiralling.
