

Homeschooling is a new revolution in the education system in India!

In recent years, many middle-class Indian families have switched to homeschooling to provide their children with a more personalized learning experience. Every parent wants to give their children a quality education that can prepare them for life, but this is not always possible through the standard education system.

Education plays a crucial role in the development of a child. We have learned the significance of education through our ancient texts like the Vedas, and because of that, Indian parents always give top priority to their child's education.

However, despite its popularity, some parents are still not aware of the homeschooling system in India. While on the one hand, homeschooling is quite beneficial, on the other, it also has some disadvantages. So keep reading as we delve into the topic of how homeschooling can bring a new revolution in the Indian education system.

What does homeschooling mean?

Before we go deep into this article, you must understand what homeschooling is and how it works.

Homeschooling is a type of education system in which kids complete their education at home using resources and study materials readily available in the market. In homeschooling, a parent takes responsibility for their child's education by focusing on their fundamentals.

The primary sources of learning in homeschooling are connections made at home, observations from daily life, and advice from family and tutors. The homeschooling culture emphasizes developing relations and promotes creativity and critical thinking rather than following the traditional education structure.

Is it legal to homeschool in India?

The Indian Government supports the right to education for every child. The RTE 2009 Act states that all children under the age group of 7-14 must receive the required education.

The Indian Government has not provided any specific information on homeschooling. However, according to the laws, it is not considered a violation and is thus allowed in India.

Rise of homeschooling in India

Homeschooling in India first originated as a way to give a personalized approach to children with special needs. As concerns about the rigid traditional education system grew, more parents started experimenting with homeschooling.

The COVID-19 pandemic affected almost every industry, and education was no exception. It fueled the acceptance of home education, and with the availability of online education platforms, the number of homeschooling houses increased drastically.

The founder and CEO of Leverage Edu, Akshay Chaturvedi, revealed that homeschoolers typically perform well in college admissions as compared to traditional schoolers. This is because homeschooling focuses on overall character development rather than evaluating solely on exam marks.

Despite its popularity, there is no proper record of the number of homeschoolers in India. Nonetheless, it is quite prevalent in all metropolitan cities like Mumbai, Pune, Delhi, Bangalore, Ahmedabad, Chennai, etc.

Reasons to go for homeschooling in India

1. Personalized Curriculum-

In homeschooling, a parent can tailor his child's education according to his interest and learning style. It will promote a child's growth and maximize his learning potential.

2. Track Growth-

Homeschooling allows parents to keep track of their child's growth and development, as they are closely involved in the whole education process. This ensures that the schedule suits the child's needs and that the learning goals get fulfilled.

3. Cost Effective-

Traditional schooling is more expensive compared to homeschooling, as it involves a mandatory fee for extra-curricular activities. Whereas in home education, this decision is totally in the hands of the parent, making it a cost-effective method.

4. New Age Education-

Homeschooling is the future of education that offers unique learning opportunities to children. It is revolutionizing the education industry, allowing students to study at their own pace in the comfort of their homes.

Pros of homeschooling

- Increased attention to detail resulting in better conceptual understanding
- It fills academic gaps and improves weak areas
- Flexibility to pursue passion and master subjects at a personalized level
- Effective for all kinds of students
- Encourages reforms in the traditional schooling system
- Quality time with family forms bonds
- More emotionally expressible child
- Association with leading organizations like NIOS and IGCSE

Cons of homeschooling

- Lack of socializing skills
- Parents need to devote a significant amount of time
- Miss out on extra-curriculum activities that schools offer
- Affect the financial situation of working parents

- Homeschoolers are more prone to skipping classes

Final take away

In India, parents are dissatisfied with traditional schooling methods, and homeschooling allows them to take control of their child's education. It lets students ask questions without hesitation and utilize their time to the fullest.

Homeschooling is rapidly growing as it prioritizes the mental, physical, and behavioral health of children, making it a necessity in the present time.
