Wordpress SEO Plugin

SEO used to be all about getting the number one spot in the SERPs of top search engines like Google and Yahoo!, and all you had to do back then was stuff your site or blog with keywords that didn't even have to be related to whatever page or post you were adding them to.

Of course, getting the number one spot (or at least getting on the first page) of SERPs is just as important today as it was back then, but the means to do so has changed dramatically. Search engines are now so much smarter that you need to actually produce quality content and develop a sound SEO strategy to see real results.

But that's not all that has changed over the years. The popularity of various social media platforms has also had a significant impact on the SEO of today.

Why social media matters

Your network on your favorite social media platform is (mostly) made up of people you actually know and trust. This means that there's a big chance that you'll click on the things that they share – even if you are not really actively searching for anything.

Long story short, the more people share your content, the more clicks (and hopefully re-shares) you get. This, in turn, boosts your website's or blog's popularity and ultimately helps you rank high on SERPs – all without having to wait for people to stumble upon you while searching for something using keywords that are related to whatever it is you are selling.

Search Engine Optimization is emerging continuously as the most important source of web traffic for most of the websites online. Thus, if you want your web page to get a higher rank in the search engine results, you just need to build your website based on a platform that can help you achieve your SEO goals

In reality, if your idea of optimizing your WordPress stops at hitting 'Publish' on your latest post, you are most definitely missing out on a lot of SEO potential. But even those of you who feel that you are doing quite well in terms of SEO are probably making at least one of these mistakes...

Why do I need plugins?

WordPress may have a reputation for being SEO-friendly but that does not necessarily mean that it is optimized for maximum SEO effectiveness out of the box. In fact, it may be more due to the fact that it has built-in SEO functionality that allows users to perform some basic optimization tasks than it being a tool that magically catapults any site or blog you put up to the top of search rankings.

This means that you'll still need to use some more specialized tools (i.e., plugins) if you want to rank high on Google and other popular search engines.

What can I do with plugins?

Well, it ultimately depends on the type of plugin that you choose. There are ones for managing keywords, organizing links and making it easier for people to share your content on social media. On the other hand, there are others aimed at more specialized tasks like alt attribute management and slug optimization. The bottom line is that for virtually any SEO task you can think of, there's bound to be a plugin specifically designed to help you do it.

The problem with using multiple plugins

Now, while using more plugins may seem like a good idea because it gives you the power to do more things, it can get messy pretty quickly due to compatibility and maintenance issues. Just think about how challenging it would be to troubleshoot issues – on top of keeping every single plugin updated all the time – if you have a host of plugins from different developers that are not really designed to work with each other.

So, which plugin should I use?

Unless you're well-versed in SEO and the different tools at your disposal, it's best to steer clear of single plugins and go for all-in-one solutions like SEO Ultimate+ instead – unless the single plugins offer something that you can't find in any of the all-in-one options available to you.

In most cases, however, all-in-one tools offer more than you'll ever need to cook up and implement a solid SEO strategy and dominate the SERPs of top search engines, so there's rarely any need to look elsewhere.

How much do I have to spend?

A tool like SEO Ultimate+ can be yours for as little as $49 for a single site. The good thing about it is that it comes with a 30-day no-questions-asked money-back guarantee if, for whatever reason, you end up not liking the product, so there's really nothing to lose.
