

DISTANCE EDUCATION DISCLOSURE

It's part of our mission to provide convenient ways for students across the nation and all over the globe to complete a teacher preparation program and/or a master's degree from the TEACH-NOW Graduate School of Education. That's why all of our degree programs are offered through distance education, with all classes delivered in virtual classes and facilitated by our Collaborative Learning Environment—all of which are outside the geographic location of our institutional offices (Washington, DC).

Online Courses

With a computer, an Internet connection, speakers, a microphone and a webcam, TEACH-NOW students can participate in online courses from any location in the world. These programs provide live instruction in a virtual classroom with a small group (student-teacher ratio—15:1), online access to course content and a wide range of activities, including frequent student-teacher and student-student communication and collaboration.

Educators' online education features:

- Faculty and student discussion forums with threaded bulletin boards
- Live chat with any student or instructor from your cohort that is online
- Real-time virtual classrooms with graphical presentations, video, audio, chat, breakout rooms, and student presentation tools
- Online submission of assignments in multimedia formats
- Institution email address
- Wiki for publishing assignments and resources to the Web
- Access to the Electronic Library and online databases
- Both onsite and virtual mentors during clinical practice

Distance Education Complaint Process

Students should note that the process for filing and resolution of complaints is described in detail through the institution's Complaint/Grievance Policy located in the most recent Catalog and Candidate Handbook that can be accessed at <https://teach-now.com/programs-degrees/>.