Bat Removal and Bat Control

Bats are fascinating mammals with incredible appetites and impressive flying skills. Bats are admirable, to say the least, but real estate and homeowners do not want these critters dwelling inside their properties. Bats will find access points into residential and commercial buildings where they feed, breed, and nest their young. They typically settle in dark and isolated areas, such as attics, sheds, and crawl spaces. When this situation is discovered, the only solution is bat removal and bat control. Continue reading to learn why bat removal and exclusion are so crucial, and how to contact your local bat control specialist for help.

Removing Bats

There are many signs that point towards a bat infestation. If you hear squeaking and scratching noises in the night, coming from within your home, then this could mean you have bats somewhere on your property. The most common way bat colonies are discovered in residential homes is simply by spotting them. Bats are nocturnal and come out at night to feed on insects. They are hard to miss when flying from their roosts.

If you discover that you have a bat colony living in your house, it is important to act fast. Bats nest and "use" in the spots that they dwell in, causing huge messes, lingering odors, soiled drywall, and torn insulation. They can also chew through electrical wiring. The longer the bats live inside the home, the worse the damages will be. After long periods of time, their urine and droppings will create a potent odor that can seep into the main areas of the building or home. It can also create stains and discoloration in ceilings and walls. The more damages incurred, the more costly the restorations and repairs will be.

Removing bats from your attic and other spaces can be a dangerous DIY job. Bats should never be harmed or killed in any situation, either. It is strongly suggested that you contact a local animal control company to handle the issue. Be sure to hire a company that specializes in bats. Using a general pest control company can be ineffective because they do not implement the appropriate techniques, nor retain the proper bat exclusion equipment. As mentioned before, bat removal should never involve extermination or harmful practices. Bats should always remain protected, and removed from buildings safely and humanely. It helps to check the company's references and verify that they are licensed and insured as well. This shows that they are well-equipped for the job. Knowing how to hire a reputable bat removal company is one of the largest parts to getting rid of bats properly.

Bat Prevention and Control

Once bats are removed from a property, bat prevention and control should be implemented. This involves cleaning up the area that was contaminated and soiled, then repairing any structural damages caused by the bats. Once the mess is cleaned and sanitized, and the repairs are complete, preventative maintenance is the final step.

Once you get rid of bats in your property, have your professional bat exclusion experts conduct a home inspection to determine what areas are vulnerable and weak. They should offer interior and exterior property inspections that allow them to determine where animals are entering the premises and what spots may be potential access points in the future. This inspection will let the specialist know where to patch up access points and how to prevent bats and other animals from coming back. Bat-proofing is the most important part of the process because it eliminates the problem altogether.
