Defining coworking spaces

Coworking spaces are community hubs that provide working spaces and amenities for professionals. They aim to be as comfortable as coffee shops and public libraries but still have the professional atmosphere of traditional office spaces.

The best coworking spaces often cater to digital nomads, freelancers, and remote teams.

Why employees are more productive in coworking spaces

Spaces that integrate both wellness and productivity are so much more effective in making people be more present. This is one of the reasons why the best coworking spaces have facilities such as nap rooms, pantries, gaming lounges, and more.

Arguably, some offices do have these facilities but remember that these hubs are catered for freelancers and those who don't have a traditional office space.

We've also tackled in detail the factors that allow workers to thrive in another list of the best coworking spaces in Metro Manila, Philippines.

How coworking spaces help digital nomads and remote-first companies

Digital nomads and remote workers operate out of their own homes as they usually don't have a designated office space.

Some of them have a dedicated working space in their homes, but some prefer to work somewhere else. There are a plethora of reasons why others would prefer to work outside of their homes, be it for the lack of space, no privacy, noises, and others.

The best coworking spaces are free from distractions yet aren't as limiting as traditional working environments.

How coworking is revolutionizing industries

The pandemic has convinced more and more companies that some jobs and responsibilities can be done remotely. Major players like LinkedIn and Spotify have mandated their employees to “work anywhere” to sustain their productivity.

Coworking is one of the factors that allow employees to stay motivated throughout their days. They cultivate a place with a sense of community even though most coworkers are practically strangers.

To an extent, having like-minded people around you can influence your productivity and efficiency while working or studying. This is one of the reasons why the best coworking spaces thrive alongside remote-first companies.

There are a lot of reasons that can affect a company's mode of working:

- Lack of probable office space
- Distributed workforce
- Employees not wanting to go to the office
- International employees in different offices and headquarters
- Lack of budget

It may be true that coworking spaces emerged to accommodate the growing population of remote workers and freelancers. They will not necessarily replace office jobs; these traditional work setups will be around for a long time.

However, coworking hubs complement industries to allow more flexible work setups and different professionals to thrive. This is especially true in the tech and creative sectors, where workers perform with just a laptop and an internet connection.
