Video	Can't Help Falling in Love - fingerpicking // Ukulele Tutorial	The tone and pace of the video was extremely helpful. I liked the step-by-step instructions for the fingering transitions. The sectioning of the video was done so that I could watch the parts I wanted to and ignore the parts I did not.	A big portion of this video was devoted to a technique in playing that I am not interested in learning at this point, so parts of it felt fairly unnecessary to my goals.
Video	Can't Help Falling In Love EASY ♥ Ukulele Tutorial	I liked how this video gave me little tips to make the actual finger playing simpler. Additionally, the hint to not strum continuously throughout the bridge was helpful as that was something I found myself struggling with.	I kinda felt like the person who made this video was less focused on the actual teaching aspect of her video and more focused on showing off her singing and playing capabilities.
Social Media	First Ukulele Tutorial-Tiktok	I liked the brevity of this video, it was short and to the point, showing the tabs on the screen as the person was playing them.	The person gave no verbal instruction at all. I am a visual and auditory learner so this felt a bit weak for me.
Social Media	Tabs for "Can't Help Falling in Love" - Pinterest	The image shows the tabs for each word instead of just the chord. The image itself is easy to access, either by phone or computer. The comments on the post are full of people giving advice and hints about how they play and what helps	-

Help Forum	Ukulele Underground	This forum was focused on the process of tuning a ukulele, which is needed for instrument maintenance. I like how there was a large community who each were able to give their two cents.	The vocabulary used was WAY over my head. The users were throwing out terms and abbreviations that made me feel very lost and I was unable to find much useful information from this particular site.
Help Forum	r/ukulele- What is your favorite strumming pattern?	While Reddit can be an affinity space, it is also a forum. I have not yet settled on a strumming pattern as I am still getting comfortable with the instrument, but know that it will be necessary to make the song sound better. Through this thread, I found that while most people use a DDU UDU (D=Down, U=up), to not focus too much on the pattern and do what feels natural.	There were only a few commenters on this particular thread and so I felt that, while the information SEEMED good, I would like to hear more information/get more perspectives about the subject before I try to focus on strumming patterns.
Affinity Space	Ukutabs	I love how the site has visual representations of all the chords and tabs that are needed to play. The chords above each word in the song was also helpful to know what to play when.	I did not like the video they had attached to this page. I found that it was not helpful as it did not have instruction in it.
Affinity Space	Ultimate Guitar	I liked how the site had sound bits of how each chord/tab was supposed to sound when you play	The video attached to this page was confusing and the UI of the site was a bit difficult. Also was very

		it. Most of the other sites did not have this function and this allowed me to hear the chords on an individual basis so I knew if I was playing the correct chord. I also liked how I could download the tabs on a pdf for this site so it could be view offline.	limited and sparse.
