

Medical Marijuana It Really Is A Healing Herb

Medical Marijuana has been used for healing for thousands of years. In ancient countries the herb had been identified as having medicinal properties. Even in more modern times Queen Victoria and her personal physician did some groundbreaking work into the medical application of marijuana. The herb had also been in common use in the United States prior to the passing of the Stamp Act in the 1920s and other marijuana laws. Today patients suffering with asthma, A.I.D.S, cancer and many other illnesses extol the virtues of marijuana use.

The History Marijuana, or Cannabis Sativa as it is known scientifically, is an herb that grows wild in temperate climates. Long before teenagers and counter culture activists were experimenting with cannabis many Asian countries had long since included medicinal marijuana on their list of healing herbs. The earliest documented use of this medicinal weed is among the Chinese. The therapeutic use of medicinal marijuana was documented by Emperor Shen-Nuan in the 28th century B.C. He wrote of its value for treating malaria, constipation, rheumatism, gout and other maladies.

How Is It Used? Medical weed can be used in a variety of ways. Some medicinal marijuana physicians prepare it as a liquid for drinking. Other health professionals feel pot is more effective when it is eaten. Smoking is another means of getting the healing properties of medical pot into the body of the person who needs healing. Some marijuana doctors crush the weed and use it as an ointment or in a poultice.

Related Seattle, Washington Laws Today Seattle, Washington is ground Zero in the battle for marijuana legalization. Since the passage of Prop 215 Seattle, Washington residents have set up a series of medicinal marijuana shops. There are also a number of marijuana vending machines in several locations throughout the state. With a Seattle, Washington medicinal marijuana card or a cannabis club card Seattle, Washington residents can legally obtain medical marijuana from any of the medical marijuana dispensaries in the state. To obtain a card Seattle, Washington must receive a marijuana evaluation by one of the medical marijuana doctors in the state.

Opening a medical marijuana dispensary is not very difficult in Seattle, Washington. This has led to a string medical marijuana evaluation centers where Seattle, Washington medical marijuana licenses can be issued. While decriminalization of medical marijuana has been an important step many marijuana activists have vowed to stop at nothing short of making weed legal in Seattle, Washington. Large segments of the population are pro medical marijuana. This has made members of the marijuana legalization movement confident they will eventually be successful.
