What regulations govern dispensaries in Anchorage?

Dispensaries in Anchorage are governed by regulations set by the Alaska Marijuana Control Board. These rules include strict licensing requirements, product testing, age restrictions (customers must be 21 or older), and limitations on advertising and operating hours. Dispensaries must also comply with packaging and labeling guidelines, ensuring all products are child-resistant and properly labeled with THC content.

Onsite consumption is generally not allowed, and dispensaries must follow security measures such as surveillance systems. For more detailed information, check Alaska's official cannabis regulatory guidelines.
